

Air Marker Atop Building on Lana Avenue Identifies Salem

By Winston H. Taylor
Staff Writer, The Statesman

As soon as the final coat of paint is applied, Salem will be added to the list of 27 Oregon communities which have installed air markers on building tops this year. And that puts the communities on the "thanks" list for many pilots, who have been oriented by the bright orange sign below them.

Salem's marker, for which the primer coat has been applied, will be on the Bonesteel building on Lana avenue, north of the highway underpass in north Salem. It is being put on by Salem 20-30 club.

A few other communities have secured the markers through the efforts of service clubs, according to William C. Hill, airport engineer for the state department of aeronautics, which provides the plans and the materials. Civil air patrolmen have put in two, a farmer one and an aeronautics association another.

The work on the others this year, of which all but Cottage Grove's is complete, was contracted to Ralph Long, Salem painter. Four more were installed by the federal civil aeronautics authority, working to the extent of its funds.

With the hopes of getting a marker to identify every community and provide more frequent aid for the lost flier, the department budgets the project out of its funds, which come from a one-cent per gallon tax on all aviation fuel sold in the state. An estimated 300 are needed, including this year's and 79 put in last year, said Hill.

It is hoped also to place arrows and latitude and longitude designations atop all forest lookouts.

The signs include the community name, latitude and longitude figures, between which runs an arrow pointing north, an airport symbol with a directional arrow and the number of miles to that field.

Communities gaining signs this year include Astoria, Drain, Sutherlin, Seaside, Gilchrist, Tillamook, Cottage Grove, Sheridan, Newberg, Oregon City, Canby, Amity, Monmouth, Independence, Albany, Adair Village, Monroe, Junction City, Eugene and Marcola.

County Permits Increase in Travel Pay

Marion county court Wednesday approved a boost in rates on traveling expenses incurred by county officials and their deputies, while on official business outside Marion county.

These rates, County Judge Grant Murphy said, correspond with a schedule recently adopted by the state for state officials and employees.

Under the new lists, maximum allowance for hotel accommodations is not to exceed $4 per night and the allowance for meals is $3.50 per day.

Maximum allowance for hotel accommodations under the old schedule adopted May 1, 1944, ranged from $3 per night in certain cities to $2.50 in other towns.

Expenses for meals were held at a maximum of $3 per day. Other rules laid down by the court order are that hotel receipts must be shown, and that dinner expenses ($1.50) are not to be allowed if the traveler could have returned home by 6 p.m.

Judge Murphy said combined traveling expenses among Marion county officials and employees are below $100 per month.

Marines Hear Capt. Jones at Salem Dinner

Salem marines, marine veterans and reservists with their wives gathered Wednesday night in Legion hall in celebration of the U. S. marine corps' 173rd birthday.

Striking the keynote of marine strength in this country's past, present and future, Capt. Robert L. Jones, a marine veteran and assistant publisher of the Capital Journal, made the principal after-dinner talk before the crowd of 259 which overflowed the hall's dining room.

First Landing in 1818 Jones said the marines have been active in the Pacific northwest since 1818 when a landing party hit the mouth of the Columbia river. He added that present marine activity here is widely recognized, with a Salem recruiting program aggressive enough to fill its quotas and help Portland meet its quotas, and with a marine reserve battery of some 150 men in regular training.

In a pageant climaxing the evening's festivities, 23 members of the marine reserve portrayed representatives of the principal branches of the marine corps whose wartime service helped win World War II. Sgt. Dwaine O'Harra arranged the pageant and most of the participants were actually veterans of the units they represented.

Greider Emcee Carlton Greider, local employment counselor and blinded marine veteran of the recent war, was master of ceremonies. A huge birthday cake was cut by Mrs. Carl Nelson and Mrs. Louis Painter.

Mayor R. L. Elfstrom gave the city's greetings and Maj. Leonard G. Hicks, commander of the local marine reserve, read a birthday message from marine corps headquarters.

Special recognition was accorded local marine leaders and visiting representatives of military organizations. Among those introduced were Col. Carl Nelson, Lt. Col. Eugene Laird, George Neuner, Jr., Milan Boniface, Robert Boardman, Mrs. David Furlough, B. E. Owens, Homer Smith, Jr., Wayne Perdue, Kenneth Frad, Peery Butler, Al Feilen, M. Sgt. Louis Painter and M. Sgt. Lloyd Barker.
