Ex-Willamette Student Heads Aleutian Trip

Many who attended Willamette university in the late 1930s remember submitting to Bill Laughlin's calipers to have their heads measured. They recall also his frequent trips to excavate Indian burial mounds in this valley and his 1938 field trip with Dr. Ales Hrdlicka to the Aleutian Islands for anthropological data.

Now Harvard university has released a report of the past summer's Aleutian scientific expedition, of which Dr. William Laughlin was field director and anthropologist.

The group, including also an orthodontist, cardiologist, linguist, ethnologist and archeologist, spent three months in the islands to study the people and their ancestors—the effects of climate, racial factors and world migration questions.

Dr. Laughlin said the population had dropped nearly 40 per cent in the past 10 years, caused largely by unchecked disease. However, tooth decay and heart disease were almost non-existent. The islanders have experienced infiltration by only one race, the Russians, in 2,000 years.

In measuring the Aleuts' heads, Laughlin found they have huge cranial capacities — which, along with skeletal remains, leads to speculation as to origins of the people.

Dr. Laughlin, a native of Salem, is the son of Mrs. S. B. Laughlin, 1705 Court st., and the late Dr. Laughlin of Willamette. He graduated from Salem high school and from Willamette university in 1941. He is now in his third year at Harvard and is with the Peabody museum there.

PATTER by JIM JE

I DON'T KNOW WHETHER YOU KNOW THIS OR NOT but this past summer Pop flew over to Europe for a couple of weeks and left me to run the place. And while Pop was visiting France and Austria and Switzerland and Italy, learning new things about places, I was learning new things about people. For instance, I discovered that folks don't just come to your shop because it's pretty. They don't even come all the time because you do the best work! No, most of them are looking for a friendly place. And besides the fact we make shoes, sell shoes, repair shoes and are pretty sure we know shoes, we also aim to have the friendliest shop in Salem.
