

Quisenberry Pharmacy Has New Home; Breyman Corner Remodelled for Modern Store

The Quisenberry pharmacy, a long-time business in downtown Salem, will open in its new home tomorrow in the Breyman building on the southeast corner of Commercial and Court streets.

The structure has been completely remodelled, and the corner fitted specifically for a modern drug store, with self-serving show-cases and shelving in Prima Vera with backgrounds in deep pastels. The walls are finished in bright chartreuse and pomegranite, with sound-proof ultra-marine ceilings.

The main floor is devoted to the prescription department, with special fixtures built by Norris Zinn, plus departments featuring displays of cosmetics, perfumes and toiletries. A complete camera department faces the Court street windows, and a center aisle is fitted with refrigerated candy cases. The mezzanine has the business office and files.

The new corner is the design of Architect Lyle Bartholomew, the interior and general fixtures the work of C. C. Parton of Silverton. Contractor was Erwin Batterman and decorator Harold Dunsmoor.

The store is one of two new Quisenberry businesses. The other is soon to be opened at the Medical center, 2440 Grear street.

Owner of the enterprise is P. D. Quisenberry, a native of Missouri who came west as a youth, attended high school in Monmouth, went to Oregon State college, served in the first World war and in 1919 purchased the interests of Mrs. Elsie Poole in the Woolpert and Poole drug store at 410 State street.

Ten years later he also purchased the interests of the late A. T. Woolpert, and continued to operate at the State street location until November of 1947 when fire destroyed the Guardian building in which the business was housed.

The Quisenberry Pharmacy for the last several months has been operated at 419 Ferry st., while the new location was being prepared. The Ferry street store was closed last night and fixtures are being removed.
