Why, that sounded like another star!" whispered Pudding. "Well, what if it was," said long before the Snow Man was Lance, pushing ahead. "There was hugging himself to keep warm. tonight. Oh, but he was wrong! For Flournoy had ridden down and even then was creeping after them in the forest. The little procession had hardy gotten started when the Snow

Man cried for them to stop. "What kind of a land is this?" from his face. "There is no snow and look! the trees have leaveseven in wintertime!"

They all looked where the Snow Man was pointing and it was easy to see, in the first light of day, that every tree was thick with summer foliage.

Then Lance and Hugo and Hubert and Pudding gasped in dis-may. "Mercy us!" they cried. "We Heads Installed forgot! This is the far south where it's always warm and At Keizer never a flake of snow!

"Then tell me," begged the Snow never told before."

"Here I go then," said Pudding and he commenced his story. Truly it was a story so filled with fright and suspense it would have raised the hair from your head to hear it. I won't tell it you here for what would you do with the shivers?

As for Danny and the brownies they had to stuff their fingers in their ears so they wouldn't hear and have their blood turn to ice, Now, wasn't that a funny sight:

Danny and the three brownies marching along with fingers in their ears; the Snow Man comhe asked, wiping the perspiration his teeth to keep them from chating along behind them clenching tering; and Pudding happily talking away and bringing up the
