Don't Look Now...

but... how long one looks forward to Christmas, and how quickly it's over! Anticipation, dear children, is the greater part of appreciation of most things, even Christmas.

On the other hand... New Year's Day, we understand, in some circles hangs on and on.

We waited until... the last minute and we're glad. We were inspired along about Thursday, we would miss that last minute rush if we ever in our lives got our shopping done. But we found bargains galore and much inspiration.

Friend in need... Mr. L. B. Williams of the Calavo Growers association, who always sends a crate of the luscious fruit for our mid-winter eating, helped out more than he knew. The label "Calavo," according to the booklet enclosed, is for our protection—but we found even the excelsior in which they were wrapped just the thing to tie around our poor freezing water pipes.

About the weather... At this writing we sit shivering in our office this Friday afternoon, looking at the snow laying a white coat over the world, shivering we said, but not from cold. We are only shuddering at the thought of "White Christmas" being added a half million more times to all the radio programs during the next few days.

Anyway... Maybe we should rush home, put props under the chicken house rafters, get in enough wood for a week and hole into our snug little farmhouse, where we can look out over the beautiful rolling Polk County hills until a thaw comes...

A little bit about music

The meeting of the National Association of Schools of Music, which Dean Melvin Geist is to attend in Chicago sounds like a musical education in itself. Among other interesting things listed on the program is a discussion of the need for a stable and useable catalogue of phonograph recordings and a banquet speech by Boris Goldowsky.

Programs will include one of works for brass instruments commissioned by NASM written by Robert Sanders, Vittorio Giannini and Quincy Porter. The program will be followed by a social hour with "appropriate refreshments" whatever those are. The Chicago Symphony orchestra under Fritz Busch will play a full evening's concert.

When the Portland symphony plays a concert in Portland on Monday night, young Jacques Abram was soloist for the Benjamin Britten concerto No. 1 in D, for piano and orchestra. Program notes revealed that young Abram, Texas born, has all rights to use the composition for this year. He will play 11 concerts, with six major orchestras during the season.

Something really extra special is being promised by the Portland symphony on February 7, when Werner Janssen directs the orchestra in the world premier of a new opera "The Dybbuk" in concert form by the Portland composer David Tamkin with Jan Peerce as soloist. The Dybbuk is based on the age-old theme of the demon soul leaving the body of one who has died, and entering another. Jan Peerce, who once, late in 1939, sang the tenor role in an audition of the opera before critics of the New York papers, with Ernorahee conducting the radio City Music Hall symphony. There'll be more in these pages about this premier... M. B.
