They'll Do It Every Time

By Jimmy Hatlo

"THE YOUNG IDEA" By Mossler

"Hey, hold off on that stuff a minute... I think we've got dates!"

Hollywood On Parade

By Gene Handsaker

HOLLYWOOD—Roy Rogers was on an eastbound train with his rodeo three months ago when he read a frightening magazine article. It said more children are killed in accidents—traffic, drownings, fire, etc.—than by the major diseases.

Now, Roy has three kids of his own. Moreover, he gets 4,000 fan letters a day. Most are from kids: Dear Roy, please send me your photo. But many are from parents. Please write and tell Dickie to eat his spinach (or study, or take his medicine, or go to bed early.) He'll do what you tell him.

All sick children get letters from Roy. But the well and obstreperous ones, who won't mind their parents, are just too numerous. So he's organizing the "Roy Rogers Riders Club." Each youngster receives a membership card bearing a picture of the cowboy star and his horse, Trigger. On the back are nine rules including: Be neat and clean. Always obey your parents. Be brave but never take chances.

Roy told me: "When I read this magazine article, I said to myself, 'Why couldn't we incorporate traffic and other safety rules into our club?' He thought the matter would be covered by that rule No. 5: Be brave but never take chances. Thus a bicyclist who hooks a ride on a passing truck will be liable to summary suspension from the club—by his mother. Roy will plug the safety rules in his comic books and on his Sunday show over the Mutual network.

Being the father of two young Roy Rogers fans, I was troubled

Your Health

Written by Dr. Herman N. Bunsengen, M.D.

It has not been so many years ago that liver disease was thought to be due, in most cases, to infections or poisons. More recently a great deal of study has been given to the effect of various food factors on the liver.

A nutritional deficiency, that is, not enough of the right kind of foods, seems to produce a collection of fat in the liver, and destruction of some of the liver tissues called necrosis. Finally, scar tissue forms in the liver and this is known as fibrosis.

Foods
The depositing of fat in the liver may result from eating large amounts of fatty foods. A number of substances seem to increase the rate at which fat accumulates in the liver. These include cholesterol, thiamine or Vitamin B1, niacin, which is part of the Vitamin B-complex, and biotin, which is also a part of the Vitamin B-complex.

On the other hand there are certain substances which are known to speed up the removal of fat from the liver. These are called lipotropic substances. The most important of these substances are choline and inositol and lipocalc, which come from the pancreas. Methionine is one of the amino acids which make up proteins. This substance also helps to get rid of fat in the liver. Cystine is another amino acid which, too, is helpful but is not so effective as the methionine.

Of all these substances, it would appear that choline is the most effective, although methionine is almost as helpful. Thus, in the treatment of liver disorders, proper diet is especially important. The diet should be high in the essential protein foods, such as meat and eggs, high in carbohydrates, and low in fats.

Treatment Advised
There is an acute inflammation of the liver known as infection hepatitis. This disorder generally occurs in well-nourished individuals, and the employment of the lipotropic substances does not seem to be of any particular help in this condition. However, when a liver disturbance is due to a dietary deficiency, or when it results from the excessive intake of fats, the use of the lipotropic substances is especially important.

All forms of liver inflammation should be treated with an adequate intake of protein foods and starches and sugars, and the diet kept low in fats. In addition, when there is any suspicion of malnutrition, choline and methionine may well be administered.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
A Reader: What would cause a person to hear the sound of his heart-beat in his head?
Answer: This may be due to high blood pressure. It is also present in certain nervous disturbances. As a rule, it is no cause for concern. (Copyright, 1948, King Features, Inc.)
