Your Health

Written by
Dr. Herman N.
Bundensen, M.D.

For some years the opinion has been held that if you blow your nose when you have a cold it is quite likely that infected material may be forced from the throat into the middle ear through the eustachian tube which connects the throat and the middle ear. It is, of course, possible that this may occur. However, Dr. W. Wallace Teed has some evidence that indicates that this does not happen very often.

This evidence was collected during the war at a naval base. The men were exposed to increased air pressure during their training in the use of a device for escaping from a sunken submarine. Because of this increased pressure, it was necessary to inflate the eustachian tubes in order to keep the pressure in the middle ear even.

It was found that out of these 30,000 men, only one developed an ear infection from inflating the eustachian tubes, and this one developed an infection while he had a cold. It was estimated that at least 90% of the 30,000 men had a cold at some time during this period. Thus, a conclusion was reached that infections of the middle ear are not caused by improper blowing of the nose during a cold.

It is true that, if a person holds both sides of the nose and blows, the pressure may force material into the eustachian tubes, but evidently the evidence would indicate that this is not responsible for the development of ear infections.

During a cold the tissues which make up the eustachian tube may become infected and inflamed, thus closing up the tube to some extent. This may lower the air pressure in the middle ear and create a vacuum. Then, the middle ear may fill up with infected serum, during a cold, causing an infection to develop.

Middle ear infection causes such symptoms as pain in the ear and fever, with inflammation of the ear drum. When this happens, it may be necessary to cut open the ear drum and allow the infected material to drain out. However, many cases may be relieved by the sulfonamide drug or penicillin.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A. R.: For the last three weeks I have had a crack in each corner of my mouth which is very sore. Will you please tell me what causes this?

Answer: It is possible that you have a disorder known as perleche at the corners of the mouth. The exact cause is not known, but it is believed that possibly an infection with a parasite, similar to a yeast or mold, causes the condition. Some cases are known to be due to a deficiency of certain essential vitamins, especially vitamin B2 or riboflavin.

Treatment of this condition should be carried out under the direction of a physician.

Hollywood On Parade

By Gene Handsaker

HOLLYWOOD—Here's the low-down on Lucille Ball as reported by her husband, Desi Arnaz: She is easy to live with most of the time, but they have their blow-ups. "She's a redhead and I'm a Latin, so we have our little difficulties," Desi acknowledged on the "Night in Havana" set. "Those are good; they get things out of your system."

Lucille rises early and starts nagging at Desi to get up, too. "I never can get up in the morning, so we argue back and forth for half an hour. It takes her an hour to get dressed, me 10 minutes. So I'm up and sitting around reading the papers before she's ready."

Her favorite breakfast is fried green tomatoes, toast and coffee. She'll go on that daily morning diet for two weeks at a time. She also relishes the food of Desi's native Cuba. Three times a week they dine at his mother's house on rice, beans, small thin steaks, onions, and avocados.

Lucy, as friends call her, owns three closets full of clothes but often laments, "I haven't a thing to wear." She'll buy 12 hats on a shopping spree and gives them all away. She seldom wears a hat. Her favorite color is aquamarine blue. She likes Desi to dress in brown.

Desi calls her Johnny because around their ranch-style Valley house she looks like a tomboy. She likes to don an old pair of overalls and fuss about her patches of lettuce, onions, tomatoes, artichokes, and green peppers. When Desi built a bathroom beside their swimming pool, Lucille helped him paint it. She also paints panoramas of mountains, lakes, hills, and snow in oils on canvas. She has had no lessons, but Desi loyally says her work looks good.

On fishing cruises aboard Desi's 33-foot cabin cruiser, he is the captain, she the sole crew. She handles the anchor and ties up to the wharf. She has never been seasick. In the Bahamas last March, she caught a 75-pound amberjack.

The Arnazes own four dogs (three cockers and a brown terrier Desi couldn't identify) and two cats. They entertain 30 or 40 friends with old-fashioned square dancing every Friday night in the Northridge Women's club. Sometimes on Saturdays, at home, there are poker sessions wherein deuces, fours and one-eyed jacks are wild and an evening of winnings may be 30 cents. Their record collection ranges from lowdown jazz to symphony. "Lucy likes anything that isn't Cugat," Desi jests, referring to his rival among Latin band-leaders. Ironically, Lucy plays a Mrs. Cugat (no connection) every week on the radio.

Desi and Lucy have been married eight years—a noteworthy interval in Hollywood. He theorizes: "We give a little, take a little, fight a little, love a little. Most of all, I guess, we understand each other."

After World War I the Italian sculptor Alceio Dossena reproduced numerous pieces of Renaissance sculpture and, he said, disposed of them as copies at a slight profit. They were so good, however, that the art dealer sold the copies as originals for fabulous sums.
