Your Health

Written by Dr. Herman N. Sundness, M.D.

Many men with a hernia or rupture which they have developed early in life find that during later years it causes a great deal of discomfort. In fact, in these persons the hernia has kept them from exercising and the excess fat interferes with carrying out the operation. Thus, the first step in preparing these patients for operation is to reduce the weight. A simple diet which can be used is one in which all the fats, starches, and sugar foods are eliminated.

The after-treatment of these patients is also important. Lung complications may occur. It is suggested that it is advisable for the patient not to remain in bed. He should be up the day following the operation, sitting in a chair. When the patient finds he is strong enough to walk, he is allowed to do so.

Of course, a younger person who has rupture should consult with his physician at once in regard to having the operation performed. Delaying until the later years of life makes the operation more hazardous. However, even in later life the operation can be performed with excellent results if the patient is put in the best possible condition to withstand the operative procedure including, particularly, a reduction in weight and improvement of muscle strength.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
C. H. J.: Can tattooing be removed?
Answer: Tattooing sometimes can be removed by surgical procedure. A plastic surgeon should be consulted. (Copyright, 1949, King Features, Inc.)

Hollywood On Parade

By Gene Handaker
HOLLYWOOD—Glimpse: Judy Garland, toiling in winter in "The Good Old Summertime," groans that she drives to work so early every morning that the moon is still shining. (So does a milkman, honey—for lots less dough.) The predominant facial expression along Hollywood streets: worry . . . The town's most infectious guffaw: June Allyson's . . . How wonderful the movies always promise to be—in the trailers or "teasers" . . . Tee hee dept.: Xavier Cugat in the Metro commissary with a bewildered pet chihuahua peeking out of his coat pocket . . . Ava Gardner, interestingly costumed in "The Great Sinner," handing dark-colored glasses to two overhead electricians—and ordering them to put the blinders on . . . Big roar of laughter from G. Peck and the crew . . . Gregory Peck's right ear is lower and smaller than the left. Furthermore, the right one is flat on top, the left one curly . . . Add trivia: Olga San Juan is fascinated in her left eye, nearsighted in her right . . . Such a dreamy spell Bing Crosby casts over an entire movie crew when he sings a song in a scene . . . Robert Ryan, flailing his arm furiously, to look exhausted in a boxing close-up of "The Set-Up" . . . One performer I could spend all day watching: Betty Garret
