Good for Less

Less Expensive Cuts that Cook Long Time Appreciated by Housewives

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Woman's Editor
There are a good many women who appreciate the fine flavor of meat which is more in the average family's budget than T-bone or sirloin steak. Long cooking meats such as pot roast, have fine flavor and cost far less than broiling or pan frying cuts. Let's just look at pot roasts. To be most satisfactory, a pot roast should weigh at least three pounds. Blade bone and round bone pot roasts of beef chuck as well as popular rump roasts are usually preferred. Long gentle cooking in moist heat or under pressure makes any one of them a culinary masterpiece. First salt the roast well on both sides. For extra brownness, rub flour into the surface of the meat. Then brown well in a small amount of hot fat or drippings in a heavy pan or skillet. If the browning process is carried on slowly but thoroughly, you're off to a good start. Add ¼ to ½ cup of water, cover and let simmer on top of the stove or in a moderate (350°F.) oven, for 30 to 40 minutes per pound. Add more water as needed, but don't be too generous. You need just enough to provide steam. For variety in making pot roasts, use a different blend of seasonings from time to time. You could sprinkle the roast with a bit of thyme, celery salt or garlic salt, before adding the flour. Then, top, carrot-seeds, bay leaf, crushed garlic, or sliced onions can be added with the water for added plus value. Avoid overseasoning. Following is the recipe for a spicy pot roast which gives the exact amounts of seasonings. When making the dumplings for this or your own favorite pot roast recipe, make sure not to lift the lid until the whole cooking period is finished, so that the dumplings will be light and fluffy just the way you like them.
