Your Health

Written by
Dr. Herman N.
Bunderson, M.D.

We have, from time to time in this column, told mothers that, shortly after birth and thereafter a young baby should be given a thorough physical examination. And one of the important things that should be noted is the child's vision.

Poor eyesight in "grown-ups" too often comes from neglect of some simple eye defect in early life. Even though the eyes are perfectly sound at birth, the eyesight may be lost through lack of use of the eyes if anything should interfere with the stimulation of vision during the period of eye development, such as eye diseases.

Crossed eyes is probably the most important eye defect requiring early treatment, usually before the age of six. The crossed eyes most often is due to a defect in vision, such as farsightedness. Crossed eyes may be the result of an injury at the time of birth, causing paralysis of one of the eye muscles, or it may develop when the vision of the eye is lost through some disease.

If the vision in one eye is not as good as in the other, the child is not able to look at an object with both eyes so the eye which is worse turns in. This frequently happens when the child's resistance is lowered as a result of some illness early in childhood. In treating crossed eyes, eye-glasses should be fitted as soon as possible. This may not be until the child is 18 months to two years of age. Exercise of the eyes and training may be necessary. Sometimes the good eye is kept covered for a period of hours each day.

which helps the development of the defective one. Surgery may be required, especially if the crossed eye is due to paralysis of the eye muscles. There are other eye defects also, such as nearsightedness, farsightedness and astigmatism.

Nearsightedness in young children does not get worse. Severe astigmatism, which occurs when the front part of the eyeball is not perfectly shaped, should be corrected with glasses. Farsightedness needs no correction until later on in childhood.

If parents become too much concerned about normal disturbances of this type, the child may become what is known as eye-conscious and develop tics or habit spasms.

Eye infection of various types may occur with symptoms such as redness, pain and tearing. These, of course, should receive prompt treatment by the physician.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
M. V.: What causes me to have terrible pains at the lower part of my back? After I've been sitting and get up I cannot straighten up for a minute or so.

Answer: Pain in the lower part of the back may be due to muscle inflammation or muscle spasm. It may come from inflammation of the joints of the spine or a strain of these joints. Disturbance of the abdomen may contribute to low back pain.

A thorough study by an orthopedic specialist is advisable so that the cause may be found and proper treatment carried out. (Copyright, 1948, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Hollywood On Parade

HOLLYWOOD — Strange sights and astounding sounds—

Gregory Peck clutching a rope that kept him exactly six feet from the camera for a walking shot in "The Great Sinner." The overall effect was that the vehicle — the camera boom — was pulling the animal. . . .

A prop man on a ladder squeezing water out of an eyedropper. The close-up, being filmed below, showed a few drops of rain hitting a table. . . . Linda Darnell grousing about having to pose for cheesecake in "Slattery's Hurri-cane." Bragged Linda: "You really have to look hard to find a bathing-suit picture of me." (Bet it'd be worth the search, tee hee.) . . .

Joe Mankiewicz and George Seaton, two of 20th Century-Fox's brightest writing and directing brains, sitting in a story huddle on a stairway. . . . so that you had to climb over them to get past them. . . .

All I want next Christmas is a box of cookies like Ann Revere baked for the "You're My Everything" troupe. . . . A motor cop telling Esther Williams why he'd never give her a ticket: "You were the only star who came to the Merced base where I was stationed during the war. . . . Walter Pidgeon's appraisal of Clark Gable: "An old shoe." . . .

A movie-making miracle called a split screen makes possible an amusing scene in "Jolson Sings Again." Larry Parks, as himself, meets himself as Al Jolson. Parks as Jolson says to Parks as Parks: "This is as close as a man ever gets to shaking hands with himself." . . .

My nomination for the movies' best feminine egg is Lucille Ball. Lucille knows her way around, and all the answers, and everybody from the janitor up likes her. I asked her how she'd managed to keep her feet on the ground. Said Lucy: "When it comes gradually, you know it's only a business. There's no such thing as stardom." Lucy was "queen of the Bs" for several years at RKO before moving on to "A" musical spectacles at Metro. . . .

Dan Dailey suggests Hollywood's No. 1 behind-the-scenes cliché. As the take is finished, the director says: "That was fine. Now let's do one more."

The Duke of Wellington, with a purchased commission, became a lieutenant colonel in the English army at the age of 22.
