Don't Look Now...

but... one thing about the weather, there's always something unexpected. Even normal weather turns into something unusual. Rains soon become floods, warm weather quickly turns to heat waves and a normal summer after awhile becomes a drought. It half the world isn't suffering from snow, it is from heat. Either the clouds are overdoing a good thing or they've disappeared altogether and the dust is beginning to drift.

Busy days... It seems that there should not be too much unemployment, as long as they can carefully sweep up sand from the Marion-Polk county bridge every day or so and then put it right back on again.

Tattletale gray... Fortunately most of our clothes run to the brown tints or Monday's wash would be something to see. Our creek took in the spring during that flash-flood and the water from the top still looks very much like coffee with a dash of cream. Incidentally, that attractive sun tan we've been sporting is the direct result of, not sunny weather, but the color of the bathwater.
