Candy Man Coming to Give Lessons

A return engagement of E. Remington Davenport, in a series of candy demonstrations, has been planned for March 14, 15 and 16 at the Portland Gas and Coke company auditorium, with the cooperation of The Oregon Statesman.

The demonstration this time will be the same each of the three evenings and matinee on Monday. This plan was adopted so more women may be accommodated during the series lectures.

Mr. Davenport will prepare candies from three basic types during each class, and will touch on the preparation of others of these types.

Fudge and its relatives, brittles and pulled candies, which include cream mints and taffy, will be made and explained. Basic principles of candy making, discussion of the use of the thermometer and many pointers on professional candymaking procedures will be on the program.

Mr. Davenport, a professional candymaker for many years, proved very popular as a lecturer during the course of lessons given here just before Christmas. Limited seating capacity of the gas company auditorium made it impossible for many women who wished to attend, but the arrangement of repeating the same class three times will, it is hoped, care for more women.

Attending the class should give a good basis for successfully making candy at home, with few failures and better quality.
