Your Health

Written by Dr. Herman N. Sanderson, M.D.

There is a condition, which is quite frequent in children and often noted in adults, known as epidemic vomiting. The exact cause is unknown. It is seldom found in infants under six months of age. It is not unlikely for a child with such an attack to vomit for a period of 24 hours or even longer. On examination, no physical disorder is apparent and, as a rule, lollipops, sugar or all-day suckers are all that are needed to clear up the condition.

The disorder starts suddenly, occurring most frequently during the months of October and November. There is usually no preceding complaint of sickness at the stomach. The patient has an increased thirst and craves water, but when water is given it is promptly vomited. The vomiting usually stops in about 24 hours. Following an attack, the patient may feel tired and weak, and there may be some lack of appetite for several days.

A Catching Ailment

It is apparent that this ailment is a catching one, and several members of a family may have the disease at the same time. In many cases, there is pain in the left lower part of the abdomen. The pain is mild and does not last very long. As a general rule, the patient does not have diarrhea, in occasional instances there may be some slight fever for a day or two. A small amount of sugar may be present in the urine of most of the patients.

Epidemic vomiting seems to respond promptly to proper treatment. The amount of fluids given by mouth is restricted to a great extent. The patients are, however, given plenty of carbohydrates in the form of sugar. Dr. J. Edmund Bradley, of Baltimore, has found the giving of a syrup in teaspoonful doses at intervals of from 15 to 30 minutes to be of great help. The patient is given no other preparation. Usually there is further vomiting after several doses of the syrup have been administered.

Following the initial treatment with the syrup, the patient is permitted to have such foods as apple sauce, gelatin products, precooked cereals with sugar added, toast or crackers, and jelly. The only fluids permitted for the first 24-hour period are tea and small sips of water taken frequently. Small amounts of cold carbonated drinks are also usually well tolerated. After 24 hours, other additions to the diet are gradually made.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A Reader: Would you please tell me the symptoms of sugar in the system?

Answer: I presume by sugar in the system you mean an excessive amount of sugar in the blood which occurs in diabetes. This would cause such symptoms as loss of weight and strength, excessive thirst and appetite, and perhaps itching of the skin.

An analysis of your blood for the amount of sugar present would be advisable. If you have diabetes, you should be under the care of your physician.
