

DeGaulle Asks For Priority on Gun Shipments

By the Associated Press
Gen. Charles De Gaulle has demanded that France be put at the head of the line for American arms shipments to put teeth in the Atlantic pact.
The French leader told a news conference the pact was a good thing but did not go far enough. He said there must be immediate shipments of arms, and France should be given priority in rearmament because she is the main base for the defense of western Europe.
De Gaulle spoke at a news conference on the local French elections the last two Sundays. In the balloting his party again made sweeping gains but failed to equal the combined strength of the three parties in the government bloc.
Informants in London said Britain, France, The Netherlands and Belgium—the four naval powers in the western European union—are planning their first joint naval maneuvers this summer.
British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin, en route to the United States with his Belgian, Dutch and Luxembourg colleagues to sign the pact, was reported ready to raise the question of setting up a Mediterranean defense pact to parallel the Atlantic defense accord.
