

VALLEJO, Cal., April 2—Damage to the submarine Perch resulting from a collision with the destroyer Orleck during March 23rd maneuvers off San Diego is seen in this first photo permitted by the Navy. Periscope and snorkel equipment is bent, and the "hangar," tank-like equipment at right, was also damaged. The Perch and the Orleck are both here at Mare Island Naval Shipyard for repair. Amity School Will Observe Its Centennial

AMITY—Small school celebrating a big anniversary this month is Amity grade school, which is observing its centennial during April. The school was established in April, 1849, by Abio Watt, on the donation land claim of his father, John Watt.

Abio Watt taught 50 pupils, ranging from six to 24 years of age, in that first school house. He named the school, and the town, Amity, or "Peace", at the conclusion of a quarrel by the settlers over the proposed location of school building.

In later years the schoolhouse was moved south, with the expansion of the community, to a location donated by Enos Williams, another early settler. The growing school was divided into grade and high schools about 1914.

Pupils of Amity grade school, which has a record enrollment of 272 pupils this year, were told of the school's history last week by Miss Laura Judy, who taught at the school for 30 years before retiring in 1936. She read a letter written to her by Abio Watt, the founder, in 1905, at the time of the Lewis and Clark Centennial, which described the establishing of the school.
