Landscape Architects Meet Here

The society of Landscape Architects of Oregon held a luncheon meeting at the Marion hotel, April 2. Mark Astrup, landscape architect for the state highway department, was the guest speaker. He stressed the role played by the land designers in the state's planning for new highways, such as the Columbia River project. Conservation, roadside beautification, route planning, the development of tourist facilities are part of the landscape architects' problems which must be solved with the engineers who actually build the roads and bridges.

An exhibit of representative work of the Landscape Architects of Oregon will be on display at the Portland Art Museum beginning Sunday, May 22, the first exhibit of its kind in the state. Public work, such as parks, recreational playgrounds, hotels, hospitals and other institutional ground development as well as residential garden plans will be on exhibition. The department of Landscape Architecture of the University of Oregon and Oregon State college are also expected to feature an interesting collection of plans. Arthur W. Erfeldt, Portland, is in charge of the exhibit.

Professor Frederick A. Cuthbert, president of the society, announced that the annual meeting would be held at the University Club in Portland, Saturday, May 2 at which time Prof. Arthur L. Peck, retired head of the landscape department at Oregon State college, would be honored. Professor Peck, who instructed at the college for 40 years was instrumental in the designing and development of the landscape plan, which has been carried out through the years.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Traglie have returned from a trip to Veneta, where they visited with her brother, David Hill.

Mrs. George Seaside will entertain members of her club at bridge and a late supper Wednesday night at her North 13th street home.

Recipes For Using Up the Tiny Smelt So Abundant Now, Are Given Below

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Woman's Editor

We were suddenly reminded by a man reader that these columns, while they have touched on vegetables in the markets, spring offerings from the gardens and many other culinary points, we have entirely neglected the little smelt.

We think, personally, that you can't beat good old crispy frying in butter or bacon fat for Columbia River Smelt, but of course we never went to the Sandy of an afternoon, dipped up smelt by the barrelsful and then tried to make the family eat every one.

We realize there's a problem there. When we fry smelt we roll them in a mixture of flour and cornmeal, season with salt and pepper and fry them in ample fat. We prefer to press them close together so they fry stick together. We fry them quick, and crisp.

A Swedish book yields a recipe for Smelt Savory. The Scandinavians cook their smelt in the oven very often with milk.

SMELT SAVORY
24 smelt
1/2 tablespoon salt
3 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons breadcrumbs
Remove heads and tails of smelt and remove bones. Sprinkle both sides of smelt with salt and allow to stand a few minutes. Roll up tightly and arrange in a buttered and crumbed baking dish. Sprinkle with bread crumbs and lumps of butter. Bake to a golden brown in a 400 degree oven for 25 to 30 minutes.

Another Swedish offering is PICKLED SMELT
25 to 30 smelt
2 teaspoons salt
2 1/2 teaspoons sugar
4 tablespoons vinegar
1 cup water
5 black pepper corras
7 white pepper Corras
2 bay leaves
4 sprigs dill (could substitute dill seed)

Clean smelt and remove bones. Rub with salt and half of the sugar, mixed. Boil water, vinegar and peppercorns, bay leaves and 2 teaspoons sugar. Flatten out the smelt and roll them tightly. Pack close together in a saucapan with sprigs of dill between layers. Pour over the pickle and simmer for an hour. Serve cold.

These may be served in aspic. Remove carefully from the saucapan and arrange in a mold. Add tomato aspic.

One can bake smelt in a casserole just about like scalloped potatoes, adding milk to cover and sprinkling with buttered crumbs.
