Your Health

Written by
Dr. Herman N.
Bundensen, M.D.

Many different types of treatment have been employed for what is known as peptic ulcer, that is ulcer of the first part of the intestines or duodenum. Just why these ulcers occur has not been definitely determined. It is thought, however, that they tend to develop in those with certain types of physical makeup, many such persons being nervous or high strung.

For years, the treatment of ulcers has consisted of the giving of milk and cream, with alkaline substances, such as baking soda.

More recently, however, ulcers have been treated with amino acids, these being the substances which make up proteins and found in such foods as meat, milk and eggs.

Recently a study was made of 23 patients with these ulcers. For the first ten days they were given a diet made up exclusively of milk, plus the amino acids which were administered every two hours in the doses prescribed by the doctor. During the next 20 days, the patients were given a more ample diet, were fed every 2 1/2 hours, and received five teaspoonfuls of the amino acids each day. After this time, the patients were allowed to eat any foods they desired, with the exception of highly-seasoned foods, spices, and tough or bulky foods.

During the period of treatment, the patients continued with their work, but were told to rest as much as possible.

In 19 of the 23 patients studied, the symptoms were completely relieved. There was a slight improvement in one case, with no benefit in three others. In those patients who were benefited, the symptoms, as a rule, disappeared within 24 hours.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

F. L.: I have a swelling of the abdomen in the morning, as well as cramps. Is there a cure for this condition?

Answer: It is probable that you have a spasm of the bowel or spastic colitis.

This condition can be cured with proper treatment.

You should be under the care of your physician.

A Reader: Is penicillin helpful in the treatment of sciatica?

Answer: Penicillin would be of little value in the treatment of this condition.

Rest in bed, massage, the use of diathermy, and sometimes drugs, such as the salicylates, are helpful.

Hollywood On Parade

By Gene Handsaker

HOLLYWOOD — A friend in the business asks if you'd like to be on television. You're scared to death. You'd be petrified in front of that camera. But it would be an experience. Something to tell the grandkids some day. Besides, maybe this is fate's finger tapping your shoulder. Maybe an important sideline awaits you in television. Perhaps (you ham, you) you are tele-visual.

So with becoming reluctance, you say yes. You tell all your friends. You have three days in which to get nervous. The last, fateful afternoon you have your suit pressed, your shoes shined, you select your shirt — pale blue because white, you have been warned, causes a glare and your necktie with the somber care of bereft relatives.

The first thing at the studio — by now your stomach's really jumping — you're made up. Along with several others in a fluorescently glowing room there is a long mirror. A long table with innumerable lotions and flat cans, like shoe-polish cans, of tan make-up paste. The make-up is to keep you from looking snow-white on the screen. It feels, until it dries, as library paste would if you spread it over your face.

Thank heaven, the others are as nervous as you are. "Why'd we let ourselves in for this?" wails a lady radio editor, wringing her hands. NBC's television studio is like a cluttered movie sound stage. Sets, scenery, hot lights, microphones overhead.

You four newsmen sit on a long davenport. Opposite, on another davenport, are actors Don DeFore and Tony Caruso and their wives. You'll play pictorial charades, team against team, on a program called "Can You Picture This?"

You're on. A television camera rolls silently toward you, its two red "on" lights gleaming like evil eyes. Sweat pours from the columnist next to you. Grin, everybody. You're supposed to be having fun.

Master of Ceremonies Jerry Lawrence hands you a piece of black chalk and a card bearing the name of a local farmers' market. He says you'll sketch "a landmark." Frantically, at an easel, you draw a crude farmer at his plow. Your team luckily guesses the market in 40 seconds. Pretty good. But the professional make-believers win. Their combined guessing time is slightly lower. The blurred ordeal is soon over.
