Gardening Today

By Little L. Madson

Lilacs, which we in past years have considered practically fool-proof, have developed a disease. It is called phytomonas syringae, which alone would indicate that it does not belong to lilacs.

So many gardeners have written asking me what ails their lilacs. They seem, to be frost bitten, only there hasn't been sufficient frost in recent weeks to bite anything so hard as lilacs.

This bacterial blight causes black spots on succulent young leaves and stems. If young shoots are marked with black stripes on one or more sides, or the entire shoot is black and flower heads limp and dark brown at first with the flower buds blackening, then there is bacterial blight.

It used to be in the good old lilac days that we considered the lilac most good natured of all shrubs, giving it any type of soil in any type of situation and just letting it grow and bloom.

But now the lilac has turned. Unless conditions are more to its liking it develops bacterial blight. So, if you are planting new ones, choose a place that has comparatively rich, well drained soil, in a sunny location and on open situation. Do not crowd them.

For the mildew which may attack in late summer, dust with sulphur. For the oyster-shell and euonymus scales which attack the lilac shrubs, use a dormant oil application before growth starts. Watch out for lilac borer, and treat the same as in trees, by injecting a nicotine paste.

For the bacterial blight, cut off diseased shoots and burn, removing down to the healthy wood. Disinfect the shears used so as not to spread the disease. Spray with Bordeaux mixture, foliage strength (2-2-50). Avoid excessive fertilization with materials very high in nitrogen. Avoid any crowding and remember at all times that lilacs like sun.

While some lilacs are budded or grafted on privet or common lilac, as a rule own-root material is available, and certainly preferable.

A trowelful of bonemeal, given in the fall to each shrub, is usually beneficial. Too, lilacs, unlike azaleas and rhododendrons, like a little digging and loosening of the soil about their trunks. Keep suckers away.

Lilacs can be grown from cuttings of half-ripened and mature wood, by the suckers (if you make sure the parent is own-root stock) or by layering.

Portland Men Are Visitors At Mt. Angel

MT. ANGEL — Portland Chamber of Commerce members, 61 strong, and Mt. Angel business men fraternized Thursday when the Portland delegation visited the co-ops, the Benedictine hilltop and were guests of the Business Men's club at dinner in St. Mary's dining hall.

George Schmidt, president of the Mt. Angel Business Men's club presided. A song and dance number was given by Francis Neisius and Sarira Prosser, and a vocal solo and encore by Master Neisius, accompanied by Miss Helen Keber.

Lewis J. Rains, vice president of Candy Products Co., Portland, was master of ceremonies for the Portland group.

Among principal speakers were Fred J. Schwab, manager of Mt. Angel Flax association, and Frank Hettwer, manager of the Mt. Angel Cooperative creamery.

Mayor Jacob Berchtold welcomed the visitors after the dinner by the Catholic Daughters of America. The Rev. Gabriel Morris, principal of Mt. Angel Preparatory, and the Rev. Hildebrand Melchior, assistant pastor of Mt. Angel, also welcomed the guests.

The visitors voiced the readiness of the Portland chamber to aid its small sister city in any civic undertaking.

Schwab told the Portland men Mt. Angel did not like daylight saving time. He also asked for aid in establishing weaving facilities for Oregon flax.

Hettwer explained the cooperative movement in Mt. Angel, and also the co-op's position in regard to the "tax-free co-op setup."
