Druze Return from Battle

Four Brothers who rule the Druze pose with an Israeli.

Warriors Aided Both Jews, Arabs in Palestine Fighting

By James M Long

ABU SNAN, West Galilee Israel, May 28. The wars with the promised explosion of time is inevitable. Wise eyed little children squat on the floor in the guest house and listen to the tales of war. Their fathers and uncles sit on the high house and smile through the waves of tobacco smoke as they talk of peace for the first time in 913 years.

These are the Druze. They are the Shahbith spoken of God, weakest of the 9 tribes of the bright little embroidered caps, followers of a religion whose inner rites are secret even from most of the worshippers.

These are some of the fiercest fighting men on earth. They are one of the strangest minorities whom the war in Palestine has left within Israel, the state of the Jews, who themselves have always been a minority in the states of others.

Druze Are Not Arabs

The Druze say they are content to have it so. They fought for it, that Israel would be their state too, these men who look like Arabs but hold themselves apart.

This time they did not go into battle as in their tribal wars of the past. They fought in the plain kaki of the army of the Jews. But with their uniforms they wore their bright caps showing under black and white kuffieh headdress. And though they fought with tommyguns and rifles, many carried the birdshead-hilted daggers of a tribe whose book, "Kitab el Hikma" says:

"To be free, a Druze must always carry a weapon, at least a knife."

Chiefs Live in Israel

There are 15,000 to 20,000 of them in Israel, here where the four patriarchs live, in nearby Julis where dwells Sheikh Tariff the religious leader, and in fifteen of the scattered hilltop villages of the Galilee.

Chief center is in the Jebel Druze of Syria and Lebanon where there are perhaps 120,000. Twenty-five thousand to 50,000 others are scattered over the world, many of them in the United States and parts of South America.

Some Aided Arabs

Some fought on the Arab side in the war over Palestine. But the sheiks of Abu Snan and Julis say that even from the Jebel 400 or more young Druze fighting men slipped across the frontier and served in the army of Israel with their Galilee Druze cousins.

The Galilee Druz say they came here 900 years ago, 57 years after they split with the Moslem faith and fled northeast from the deserts of Egypt. Their religion now is a secret like much of their past. It is impolite to ask a Druze about his religious beliefs. He will not tell. The "Book of Wisdom" of his faith combines sayings from the Bible, the Koran and the Torah.

Few Understand Religion

Only the outer forms of worship are known to the Jubal, the common people, mostly farmers and growers of tobacco. Only the Ukal of religious caste know the inner rituals. By popular belief—unconfirmed by the Druze themselves—these take form around a belief in reincarnation.

That, it is said, is why the Druze dies so bravely in battle. He is said to believe there are only a fixed number of Druze souls. Unless warriors die at the rate babies of the tribe are born, some of the children would be soulless. That, too, it is said, is why it is punishable by death for a Druze to marry outside his own people.

Arabs Prefer Jews

The Druze says he is a mixture of Persian, Egyptian and perhaps Kurd, but that he is not an Arab.

"If you put a Druze and a Jew before an Arab, he will slay first the Druze," the brother of Sheikh Tariff put it.

The high patriarchs of Abu Snan are four brothers: the youngest 70, the oldest 88; proud, fine featured, black robed men in scarlet crowned and easy laughter disclose perfect teeth.

They, who lead warriors, talk hopefully of peace in this new state.

"We would like to see this country become a paradise on earth,"

Soviet Policies Run Counter to Aims of Allies

By J. M. Roberts, Jr.
AP Foreign News Analyst

WASHINGTON, May 29 — Russia would like to turn the German clock back to the days after Potsdam.

She wants to return to something like the old four-power control council. She wants to turn Allied plans for German self-government into a system whereby the Germans would merely administer the council's policies through a central organization, as against the state organizations which existed before.

These were the highlights of Andrei Vishinsky's long-awaited policy statement in Paris.

Allied Policy Blocked

The run counter to Allied policy in almost every respect. They raise the question whether or not Russia's recent display of conciliation may not be merely a series of gestures after which they will renew their propaganda line that the west is responsible for continued division of the world into two camps.

The Allies have left the way open for Russian entry into the new high commission which will replace military government simultaneously with the establishment of a federal government of western Germany. There might be a possibility that Russia would compromise for that.

But there is a factual situation to be balanced even before that could happen.

Allies Distrust Russia

The high commission is planned as the result of a whole series of developments in western Germany—currency reform, establishment of democratic processes, drafting of a constitution and provision for free elections. The commission will begin to operate only when this series of events is complete, perhaps in July.

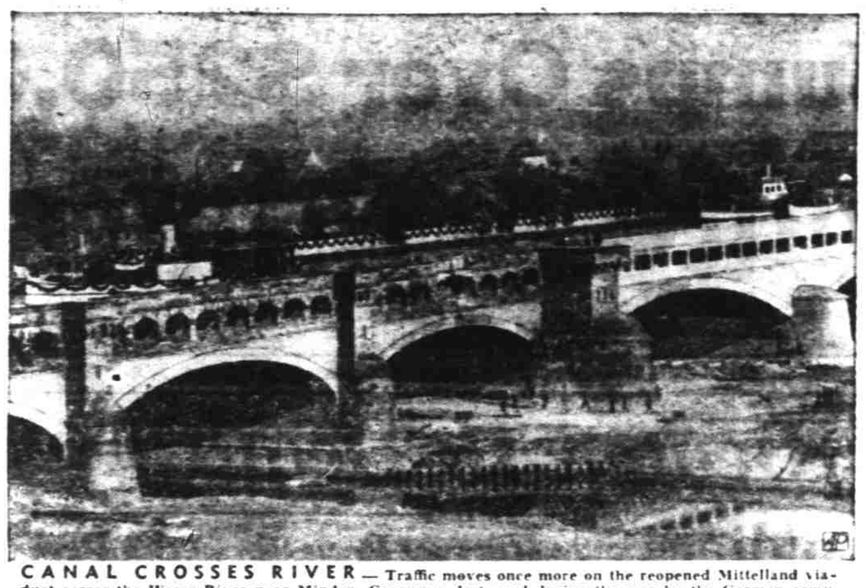
Allied diplomats say, in the light of experience, agreements and promises on Russia's part have no meaning except to establish concrete action as policy.

Doubts Red Cooperation

For unification of Germany, then, and for re-entry of Russia into control collaboration, Allied policy would require a series of steps in the Russian zone paralleling those for western Germany. The Soviets would have to tear down the iron curtain between zones, establish truly democratic processes in their area, and send representatives to the central government who have been chosen in free elections supervised by all four powers.

The chance that Russia will accept such terms seems to me to be more remote than that she will reverse her eastern European policy and establish democratic processes and free election machinery as the western powers got Stalin to promise at Yalta. It is almost as remote as the chance that the Allies would agree to return to any system of control like the one that failed so miserably after the Potsdam agreement.

ADVISER — John Foster Dulles (above) will advise U. S. group at Paris meeting of Foreign Ministers on Germany.



CANAL CROSSES RIVER — Traffic moves once more on the reopened Mittelland viaduct across the Weser River near Minden, Germany, destroyed during the war by the German army. The viaduct cuts travel between the Ruhr and the Hannover-Brunswick area by six hours.

Major West Coast Earthquake To Arrive 'Sooner or Later'

By Frank Frawley

PASADENA, Calif., May 29 —(AP)—Scientists say stresses are accumulating under North America's greatest earth fault, the San Andreas, that sooner or later will cause a major earthquake on the Pacific coast.

It may come tororrow or ten years hence, or its destructive force may not be unleashed for a century or more. California Institute of Technology geophysicists are agreed, however, that recent earthquakes in the Pacific area do not mean that a major temblor is imminent.

Drs. Beno Gutenberg, Charles F. Richter and Hugo Benioff, who have spent years of research on quakes, all say there is no way accurately to forecast their time. Comprehensive and reliable records of quakes do not go back far enough.

1906 Quake Was Worst

The San Andreas fault has been inactive since the 1906 San Francisco quake and fire. America's last great earthquake. It and the fire caused $400,000,000 damage. The quake measured 8½ on the magnitude scale, which means, to seismologists, it corresponds to the largest shocks ever recorded.

Santa Barbara's 1925 quake with $10,000,000 damage and Long Beach's 1933 temolor, $75,000,000 damage, both were 6¾ on the magnitude scale, or slightly stronger than what scientists classify as "moderately destructive" earthquakes.

Those two quakes come from two of the myriad of minor fault lines that thread Southern California, which has thousands of inconsequential quakes a year. The Long Beach and Santa Barbarbra quakes were destructive because their epicenters were in populous areas. Dr. Benioff says they released only about 1 1,000 of the energy of the San Francisco quake.

Nevada Quake Unnoticed

America's second strongest quake, Oct. 2, 1915, passed relatively unnoticed because its epicenter was in unpopulous north-central Neveda.

The big blow-off on the San Andreas fault may come anywhere along its 800-mile course. It begins 600 miles at sea, off the Oregon coast. It enters the coastline near Eureka, Calif., shoots southward to San Francisco and San Jose, runs through the coast mountain range and the Mojave desert to Imperial country just north of Mexico, then swings into the Gulf of California.

Dr. Gutenbergs says: "All earthquakes in California since the 1906 San Francisco have been merely aftershocks. They have not been building up to a major earthquake."

He and Dr. Benioff point out, however, that U. S. coast and geodetic survey's triangulations along the California coast show earth movements actually are going on; that mountain ranges on both sides of the San Andreas fault are drifting apart. Significantly or not, the shift continues at about the same rate that preceded the San Francisco quake.

Since the 1933 earthquake in the Long Beach area building codes have been strengthened so that all public buildings and many private residences are securely bolted to their deeply entrenched foundations.

California Houses Elastic

Some massive structures are so entrenched huge plungers enable the buildings to ride with the vibrating earth. Most residences in Southern California have an elasticity for quality. While the stucco may be cracked, the overall structure is designed to withstand heavy quakes.

Los Angeles county authorities recently voted to compel owners to remove hazardous parapet walls and overhanging filigree on buildings constructed prior to the 1933 quake "because they imperial human safety." This type of construction has not been permitted in the last 15 years.

The California - Nevada sector has about 90 per cent of the seismic activity of the nation, or about 5,000 quakes a year, but that figure is only 13 per cent of the world's total.

Memorial Day Talk Stresses U.S. Strength

A nation paying homage to its [illegible] dead was told yesterday it cannot fully discharge its debt until it becomes "a strong America forever free of the threat of another war."

Secretary of Defense Johnson issued the Memorial day statement as Americans prepared to kneel at flag-decked graves around the world and assemble in their churches to pray.

"We can have peace if we remain strong," he said. "Peace through strength must be our goal."

Washington was crowded with perhaps 175,000 visitors as the capital made ready to sound taps for soldiers of four wars lying under the green slopes of Arlington National cemetery.

Yakima Bears Take Second Game, 9 to 6

PARKER FIELD, Yakima, May 29 —(Special)— The league leading Yakima Bears tallied four runs in the eighth inning in the second game of their doubleheader with Salem tonight and went on to win a 9-6 decision. Salem won the first game, 6-3 (see today's sports page).

Jimmy Foster, seeking his fourth win of the season for Salem, was batted out in the eighth and Bus Sporer, who hurled the first game tonight, came in. But Ted Jennings greeted Sporer with a triple with the bases loaded and the Bears then extended their Western International league lead to five games.

Foster was the losing pitcher. Lefty Larry Powell was the winner. Salem had 11 hits off Powell, but the Bears collected 14 off Foster and Sporer. A Senator rally in the ninth, good for two runs, fell short.

The clubs end their crucial seven game series tomorrow night with a doubleheader. Yakima now leads the series, three games to two.

A great crowd of 3600 watched tonight's twin bill.

Burley Quits Walcott Camp; Jolts Too Much

MOMENCE, Ill., May 29 —(AP)— Charley Burley, Jersey Joe Walcott's sparring mate, has had enough.

Burley, who stayed 20 rounds with Ezzard Charles in two fights, was given a severe jolting by Walcott yesterday, lasting only 1½ rounds in the workout.

"That Walcott isn't kidding," Burley said today. "He blasted me with that right hand until I was out on my feet. I never thought that would happen the first day of camp — I'm heading for home."

Morris Cops $50 Hole-in-One Test

There wasn't a single ace in the hole-in-one contest held at the Salem golf course in conjunction with the Elks tourney, but Glenn Morris had a shot 2⅛ inches from the cup that was good for a $5 weekly prize and the $50 grand toga.

Harry McBurnett dropped a shot 26¾ inches from the pin during the past week to grab off the final $5 prize, but it wasn't even close to Morris' near-ace. Morris led through most of the four-week contest, sliding in a 14¾ inch shot in the first week and trimming down the distance in the third week.

Alaskan Bison Hunt Studied

JUNEAU, Alaska, May 29 —(AP)— As if they didn't have enough bear, moose, caribou, bighorn sheep and other assorted big game for their rifle sights, Alaskans may get a chance this year to draw a bead on bison.

W. A. Elkins, Wildlife management supervisor for the territory, said today hunters may be permitted to shoot about 50 bulls from the Big Delta herd this fall.

The buffalo were introduced to Alaska in 1928 from the national bison range in Montana. The 23 animals of the original plant, thriving on their new range southeastof Fairbanks, have increased to about 325, Elkins said.

They like it so well they haven't strayed 30 miles in 21 years, but now the range is threatened with overstocking. Elkins said a restricted hunt had been recommended to cull the herd.

Plans to move part of the herd this spring to a new range on the Copper river near Slana were balked by untimely snows and early calving.

Sweet Home Man Arrested at Detroit

On arrival here he was treated by city firs aid men for a cut on the head.
