

River, Harbor Funds Pegged For Northwest

WASHINGTON, June 30 (AP)—The Pacific northwest would get nearly 10 per cent of the total proposed in the Omnibus Rivers and Harbors authorization bill approved today by the house public works committee. of the $1,120,717,850 proposed authorization Oregon, Washington and Idaho would get $166,031,100. The measure, however, carries no funds. Congress would have to vote the money later for any construction.

Reps. Angell (R-Ore) and Mack (R-Wash), members of the committee, said "the treatment is the best ever received by the Pacific northwest."

The bill would provide: $40,000,000 for flood control work on the Willamette river in Oregon; $14,000,000 for flood control work in Portland; $4,900,000 for lower Columbia river bank improvements $322,000 for Johnson creek in Portland; $31,070,000 for Albeni Falls, Idaho, Dam and reservoir; and $14,722,000 for flood control work on the lower Columbia.

The proposal allots the lower Columbia flood control projects to both Oregon and Washington, the former getting $5,461,000 and the latter $9,261,000. Under the rivers and harbors section of the bill Westport Slough, Ore., would get $112,000 and Columbia Slough, Ore., $965,100.

"The disastrous floods in the Columbia region last year which caused damage of $102,000,000 influenced the committee to give us all possible protection," Angell said.

Mack said the bank protection work on the Washington side of the lower Columbia would include dikes from 200 feet to two miles long and would give protection to Longview, Kelso, Kalama, Woodland, Ridgefield, Puget Island, Skamokawa, Washington, Vancouver and the Vancouver lake area.

Young Dancers Show Talents At Coronation

Specialty dancing by 200 young Salem dance pupils and social dancing for all who attended were features of the Salem Cherryland festival opening night's entertainment at the fairgrounds Thursday.

Some 200 boys and girls of the Paul Armstrong dance studio presented a revue of wide variety. Three-year-old "Baby Rockettes" did one of the numbers; other youngsters costumed as cowboys and Indians had a "Westward Ho" dance and several youngsters were featured in ballet dancing and numerous other specialties including the popular dancing twins, Jerry and Gary Neal. (Dancers listed on page 24.)

Queen Patricia's entertainment on coronation night also included dances by Merlain studio performers, Sandra Bliven, Judy Green and Elaine Murphy and J. T. Clapp.

A special gift to the new queen was a giant assortment of Stay-ton cooperative's canned goods, presented by Ed Bell of the Sunbeam Bean festival. Two delegates from Queen Joyce of Portland's Posaria brought a bouquet of roses for the cherry queen. They were Leslie Poole and Don Goetz. Claude Bird's dance orchestra provided music for the coronation ceremony and played later for the public dance under the grandstand. Other coronation entertainment was supplied by a trio of zany Cherrians, Ed Ran-
