(Editor's Note: Fifteen-year-old Ronnie Thorsen of Portland has been bed-ridden most of his life with recurrent attacks of rheumatic fever. But that hasn't dampened his enthusiasm for model airplane building which he does with such skill that last year his plane, flown by a friend, took first place in an international contest. Ronnie tells in this series of articles how to get started in one of the fastest growing hobbies in the nation.)

CHAPTER FOUR

Covering and Finishing

In building more advanced styles of model planes, nearly all designs make use of covered wing and fuselage rather than solid forms. The many variations in designs used by modelers mean that this part of building becomes one of the most important things to master if you want to really go places in model plane making. Good covering and finishing means a lot when your planes are entered in contests, judging is based on appearance as well as flyability.

Flying scale designs, which are more or less my specialty, require a lot of little details which call for as much patience as skill. Patience is something I've had to develop while being shut in much of the time.

When you have been working on a design and have built it up to where the final covering and finishing is to take place, it seems like it's that point where your interest is just about at the peak. Only when the craft is about to be sent skyward on its first trip will you have more anxious moments.

Cover Materials Vary

Several materials may be used to cover the majority of built-up models. Various types of papers, silks and fabrics are in general use. Occasionally, even the ambitious modeler may hack into some nylon article belonging to the women of the family, and if he can get away with it, produce a good tough cover which will stand a lot of abuse. However, there are some standard procedures that will hold for most covering jobs.

Here are some steps which I find work well for me. One of the first things is to study your covering tissue; notice, if it is paper, that it tears with the grain. Always apply tissue with the grain running lengthwise of model and spanwise on wings. First cut paper to approximate size of part to be covered. A little large is safer and allows some leeway in working.

Lay your tissue on work table and spray with water. A window spray bottle can be adapted very well for this. Now, heavily dope edge of surface to be covered and apply paper while still wet, being careful not to tear it. Pull tissue as tightly as possible without injury.

Use Pins for Safety

Next comes a very important step. If the piece being worked on in a wing, stabilizer or rudder, pin it down to your working board until it dries or it will be sure to warp. Then while it is still secured to board, apply a coating of dope on the top side. After this has dried, unpin the piece and turn over to repin and dope the other side. Now, for example, if you are working on a wing, unpin it and turn it over again. Pin trailing edge of one wing half down on board. Dope, watch, and adjust with hands as it dries to avert warp. Then repeat on the other wing half.

If fuselage is rounded, cover in small sections; apply wet tissue as above. After covering all of fuselage, give the whole a coat of dope. Individual small parts of a plane such as doors and panels are covered using same technique.

A model needs no more covering than this and will probably fly best this way as each coating of dope adds weight. Should you want to color your model, apply one or two coats of color dope, pinning each surface as before to prevent warping. If your model has too dull a finish to suit you, add a last coat of clear dope. Keep in mind that each coat of dope may cut down the flight performance of your plane.

Two Coats of Sealer

For just a word regarding finishes on all balsa models, you should first apply a coat of sanding sealer. After this dries, sand smooth and apply a second coat of sealer. After again sanding smooth, the surface is ready for color doping. One clear coat of lacquer as a finish gives a gloss.

Something to keep in mind as far as finish is concerned is that fuels used in gas - powered engines will in many cases ruin a painted surface. Keep fuels away from them unles you want to repaint.

In dressing up your plane for appearances sake, there are many desirable decals available. Numbering, authentic trade marks, designs and decorations are available through your model dealer. Individuality may be shown by applying your own painted designs if you are so talented.

Selling Slices Grain Prices; Oats Escapes

CHICAGO, Aug. 3 —(AP)— A selling flurry toward the close knocked prices lower on the board of trade today. Everything was hit by the late downturn, although oats managed to save a small part of fairly substantial early gains.

The only specific news upon which the selling could be pegged was a further easing in cash wheat prices at Minneapolis, particularly on low protein grades. This type of wheat has lost about 14 cents this week as receipts have expanded while commercial interests have shown little interest in buying.

Wheat closed ¾-1¾ lower, corn was 2 to 2¼ lower, oats were ⅛ lower to ⅜ higher, rye was 1 to 1½ lower, soybeans were 1¾-2¾ lower and lard was 17 to 40 cents a hundred pounds lower.

Little domestic or export flour business was noted. Corn lagged all day. One reason was the excellent crop outlook. Despite the outlook for the new crop, old crop grain is not coming to market in any volume. Purchases on a to-arrive basis totaled 45,000 bushels. Spot prices were unchanged to ½ cent higher.

American steel production in 1948 was 88,533,729 tons, a peacetime record.
