Many Towns Named Salem in U.S.A. Salem, Illinois is Center of Bustling Oil Field

SALEM, Ill., as Salem, Ore., is the county seat of Marion county. Shown above is the county courthouse at Salem, Ill., located in the heart of the city's business district, and coincidental with Salem, Ore., also has a beautiful Methodist church located across the street. (Benke photo)

One of several large industries in Salem, Ill., is the Texas company oil field shown above. Southwest of the city the oil wells, owned by two of the larger oil companies and many individuals, produced over 4,000,000 barrels of oil in 1948. Many of the oil workers are housed in oil company-owned housing projects. (Vursell photo, Salem, Ill.)

Government Stalls Action on Fruit Buying

Any government buying of northwest tree fruit must wait until the harvest is further along, W. J. Broadhead, field agent for the federal fruit and vegetable branch, USDA, said Thursday. Broadhead made the statement in response to queries for prompt government buying action.

Northwest growers had noted, Broadhead said, that the USDA has started purchases of Bartlett pears and Gravenstein apples in California. Broadhead said the shipping season has just started in Yakima, Wenatchee and Southern Oregon.

The growers had noted California Packers' prices on Bartlett pears were between $25 and $40 a ton. Oregon growers have cited an Oregon State college experiment station survey that the reported $40 a ton for pears was below the growers' cost of production. Packers last year paid between $120 and $135 a ton.

Salem, Illinois Also Marion County Seat

By Eric Bergman
SALEM, Illinois, Aug. 5—(Special to The Statesman)—This Salem, like hometown in Oregon, is also a county seat city of a Marion county.

The resemblance just about stops there, however, as the Illinois Salem is a bustling oil field city of 8,500 population, located in west central Illinois, 67 miles east of St. Louis on U. S. highway 50.

The wife and I arrived here just in time for the first day of the 66th Annual Marion County Soldiers' and Sailors' reunion, which draws crowds from all over the state estimated at 35,000 daily. The reunion celebration is held at Bryan Memorial park, named in honor of William Jennings Bryan the Great Commoner, statesman and orator, who was born here March 19, 1860, and who was unsuccessful Democratic candidate for President of the United States in 1896, 1900 and 1908.

This four-day reunion is sponsored, and profits divided, by four veterans groups. At the park, 30 acres of it, a nightly free show attracts thousands.

County Fair Held Here
Here, also, the Marion county fair is held annually, usually in September, though experimentally early this year.

This city, the largest Salem we've visited thus far, describes itself as "typically middle western." It is one of the oldest cities in the state, situated on the eastern border of Grand Prairie and located on the old Vincennes-St. Louis stage route. The Illinois Salem's first settler was Samuel Young, in 1813. Many of his descendants are now wealthy as a result of oil discoveries in the vicinity. First settler at the exact location of the town, however, was James Roberts in 1819. An old landmark, formerly a tavern and stagecoach station, where Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas are said to have stopped, still stands on West Main street.

The city and the county were founded in 1823, and Salem retained its village charter until 1865. First Mayor of Salem was W. E. McMackin, grandfather of another ex-Mayor Omar J. McMackin, furniture dealer. Present mayor is Herman F. Austin, service station owner and operator. Four Utilities City-Owned Salem, Ill., government is the mayor-council type, with four councilmen, all paid and elected. The city boasts of being one of the few in the nation to own all four of its utilities, power and light, water, gas and sewage. The power plant is supplied by coal-burning powered generators.

Charles Roberts, postmaster, and owner and publisher of the Marion County Democrat (weekly) gave us much information concerning the industries of Salem. The largest industry here, of course, is petroleum oil, which produced over 4,000,000 barrels of oil from Salem oil fields in 1948. Represented as oil producers here are the Texas company, (largest), Magnolia oil company and many individuals. Oil has increased Salem's population nearly 63 per cent from 4,400 to nearly 9,000. Large gasoline plants and pipelines were built. Some $90,000,000 will be spent in the near future in a unitization program in which oil tests are expected to extend the life of the Salem oil fields 30 to 35 years, we learned from Ed Jones, editor of the Salem Republican, (weekly) published by Adolph Dietrick. Public Aided Shoe Factory

Other industries here include a shoe factory (for which the chamber of commerce and subscriptions raised $400,000 for plant and site); a dress factory, trouser factory, bottling plant, paint factory, vault factory, tank factory and web guide factory. Salem is also noted for its fruit production, particularly peaches.

The oak-groved Bryan Memorial park provides ample recreation, including a large swimming pool with water provided from Salem's water reservoir, supplied by rainwater. The city also has a modern brick geologic-style Salem Memorial hospital, non-profit and controlled by a Salem-citizen elected board. Streets here are brick-covered with concrete and asphalt base. Churches (10) include the Baptist (probably predominant), Presbyterian, Methodist, Nazarene, Church of Christ, Episcopal, Catholic and several others. All three theatres are owned by one individual. Parking Meters New Here
Parking meters are in their third week here and the consensus is, according to people we talked to, that they have been accepted favorably after a people's poll and council vote put them into operation. Railroads here, with three stations, are the Baltimore and Ohio, the Missouri Pacific and the Chicago and Eastern Illinois (north and south). Bus lines run from here in all directions. Charter service is provided at the airport. The city is proud of its schools. The three-ton cornerstone was recently laid for a brand new $1,500,000 consolidated high school. The old high school will be used for a junior high to supplement the two grammar schools already in operation. (Next — Salem, Indiana)
