Simple Affair

By Maxine Buren Statesman Woman's Editor
When we hear the over-sweet voice of the radio announcer telling us that we can afford to buy the best bread for our little darlings, we recall that we can also afford to use bread in other ways than as a mere vehicle for butter and jelly.
Just toast can appear in a wide variety of ways.
Cinnamon toast, probably one of the most popular of all toast specialties, was a common mid-afternoon snack in our college days. It seems, however to have been almost forgotten as a satisfactory dish for afternoon or evening eating. Serve cinnamon toast and tea for Sunday night supper and you've a satisfactory light meal.
But there are other ways to use toast, for instance, the good old club sandwich is a meal in itself. You butter slices of hot toast, put lettuce and chicken in the first layer, crisp bacon, tomato slices and lettuce on the second and stick with toothpicks to keep from slipping, then cut in four diamonds.
This is the standard "club" but you can use any fillings.
Toast makes an excellent base for creamed dishes. They are called toast points or toast wedges in the fancy menus, but they are simple pieces of toast, just the same. When putting on the creamed mixture, leave some of the bare toast exposed so there'll be a portion of crispness to be eaten.
Chili toast is a new one to me, spread hot buttered toast with chili sauce and sprinkle with chopped cooked bacon.
A booklet being attached to a new automatic toaster includes some other good suggestions for using toast.
Honey butter toast, for instance, is plain toasted bread topped with a mixture of softened butter and honey in equal parts. A pinch of cinnamon added is recommended.
Our family's favorite breakfast includes milk toast and fried apples, a particularly fine dish to start the day. Fry unpeeled eighthths of apples in butter, adding a little brown sugar to glaze. Make the toast, and have bowl of hot milk seasoned with salt and butter handy. Put the toast into the milk a few seconds just as you are ready to serve it, add apples to the top, pouring a little of the hot milk over the top if desired.
CROUTONS, final way we'll use toast for today, makes a more important dish of soup. Toast the bread and cut it in squares, or toast after cutting. Sprinkle with butter and serve with the soup.

Junior Women at Fall Meeting

Mrs. Sam Campbell, the new president of the Salem Junior Women's club presided at the first fall meeting held Monday night at the clubhouse.
Delegates to the district convention were named, Mrs. Calvin Kent, Mrs. Sam Campbell and Mrs. E. W. York.
The next meeting will be a fall fashion event.
To Dr. and Mrs. L. Robert Burdette go congratulations on the birth of a son, Steven Craig, on Wednesday at the Salem General hospital. The little boy, who weighed eight pounds, ten ounces, has an older brother, Leslie Robert, Jr. The grandparents are Dr. Leslie R. Burdette of Salem, Mrs. Marie Burdette of San Francisco and Mrs. Katheryn Stroh of Denver.
