

Front Change For Building Gets Approval

The state board of control Tuesday approved a preliminary plan change to permit construction of the Portland state office so it will face Fifth avenue instead of Columbia street.
Architects said this change would give the structure improved exterior appearance and provide a separate lobby. Preliminary plans will be completed February 1. Construction, tentatively scheduled to start by April 1, 1950, will require from 15 to 18 months.
Board Secretary Roy E. Mills said requests for space in the new building were more numerous than originally anticipated.
The state board of health has filed application for three and one-half floors, the state welfare commission three floors and the state unemployment compensation commission one floor.

State activities in Portland not being considered for space in the building include specifically the board of engineering examiners, board of medical examiners, board of naturopathic examiners, board of architect examiners and state board of accountancy. It was pointed out that the executive officer of each of these groups carries on his private business from quarters at present occupied.

The board approved plans for a new one-story hospital at Fairview home here to replace the one destroyed by fire several months ago. It would have a capacity of 87 beds and cost $300,000. Approximately $92,500 would be obtained from the state restoration fund and $200,000 from the state building fund authorized by the last legislature.

Sale of the Mulkey building, located at Second and Morrison sts., was approved. Bids for the structure will be advertised. The structure was bequeathed to the state several years ago by Frederick Mulkey in memory of his deceased brother.
