New Gadgets for Combination Storm and Screen Windows

By Mrs. Genevieve Smith
Even though your house may stoop a little with years, today there are new gadgets on those storm and screen windows that will enable you to fit them into frames that are not perfectly shaped.

What turns this trick is a series of flanges on the outside of the frames, which are used to give the necessary tight fit when the installation is made. Once these combination windows are in, switching from one season to another is a small chore indeed.

The lower screen sash is removed, and the storm window is slipped into its place. The upper sash is a storm sash that stays permanently in place.

This is the voice of experience speaking. We installed this type of combination in our old country home, when it was rebuilt with a series of Blanding-like ups and downs a couple of years ago. The price we pay for the sweeping view of hills is complete exposure to winter's howling winds. However, we find these combination storm windows plus a new accordion-pleated type of aluminum foil insulation, combine to give us a tight 150-year-old house that keeps fuel oil bills to an amazing minimum, even in a New York state winter.

Of course, in a new house your windows should be placed, which means no fitting difficulties. Incidentally, the range of stock sizes in the combination storm and screen windows is now quite large, and you'll find them not only in building supply houses, mail order houses, but in a good many department and hardware stores as well.

Carroll Gregg Tells of WAVES

Capitol Unit 9, American Legion auxiliary held the first meeting of the year at the Salem Woman's clubhouse Monday night, with Mrs. Walter Spaulding, president, presiding. An unusually large and enthusiastic attendance made plans for the coming year. Reports were given by Mrs. Clara Poland and Mrs. Raymond Basset on the state convention held in Salem in August, and a program presented for rehabilitation and child welfare for the year. A generous contribution was made to the emergency polio fund. A rummage sale will be held by Capitol Unit on October 21 and 22.

The business meeting was followed by a program with Robert Gwynn of Willamette university presenting a group of songs, accompanied by Miss Lois Gottwald at the piano. Miss Carroll Gregg, a member of the Waves, home on leave, gave an interesting talk describing her work and activities in the service. Miss Gregg and the unit were serenaded by the Capitol Post 9 drum and bugles corps during the evening, with Leon Brown, in charge of the group, giving a short speech.

Visiting in the capital this week are Mrs. Clyde Carroll, Jr., and sons, Patrick and David, who are guests at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Langille.
