

Tourists Need More Data On What to See in Oregon State House Guide Reports

By Conrad G. Prange
Staff Writer, The Statesman

Tourists who are flocking to the Salem area annually in ever-increasing numbers bring with them some peculiar notions, according to James McGilchrist, tourist guide at the state capitol building.

One tourist, who came all the way from Connecticut, had been informed by an eastern tourist agency to visit the "state house and the Bush Arboretum." Not a word had been told this tourist, said McGilchrist, of Oregon's thousands of other attractions.

Amazed at scenery Many travelers from the east and Midwest are amazed at Oregon's scenic beauty and outdoor recreation when they arrive. But usually they haven't allotted themselves enough time to linger, said McGilchrist.

Agencies Misinformed A crying need, said McGilchrist, is more specific information about Oregon in the east and Midwest. Many eastern travel organizations, ignorant of this state's blessings, book tourists for about only two days each in Washington and Oregon and for 10 days in California.

Several local auto courts and hotels indicated their tourist business was on a par with last year's— but above any pre-war year.

Records from Sam Boardman, state park superintendent, however, show that the 170,000 visitors to Silver Falls park this summer is "substantially above" last year's figure.

McGilchrist said that the volume of business which he handled this year is easily 20 per cent above last year.

He not only conducts tours through the capitol building but and this is his biggest job—he routes tourists through the rest of the state. They come to the capitol because they have been advised to and McGilchrist takes over from there. His office in the state house is a reservoir of information of all kinds on all sections of the state.

During a peak day this summer, said McGilchrist, he routed 57 cars to other sections of the state and catered to 1,000 individual visitors.

Many Canadians Residents of Canada form a large part of our tourist trade, McGilchrist stated. One reason is that Canadians may take $150 with them into the United States this year. Previously they had been allowed only $15 each.

Visitors from Switzerland, England, Australia, Hawaii also are included in the day's run. Many visitors, especially Canadians, expressed disappointment that local restaurants did not serve fresh fruits and vegetables this summer.

Currently the visitors to the capitol and to the rest of the state passing through McGilchrist's office, total about a dozen daily. Within a month, though, he said the trade will again pick

Salvation Army Offers Youth Recreation

Craft classes and recreation each Saturday from 1:30 to 9 p.m. for all interested Salem young people were announced this Saturday by Salvation Army officials. The program will start tomorrow at 241 State st. in charge of Lt. Barbara Somerville, youth director. The classes will include wood carving, sewing, painting, dramatics and music. Recreation facilities have been enlarged to include three new ping pong tables in the upper hall and a shuffleboard court in the basement. A period of supervised games is planned each week. There will also be a snack bar in the basement. One evening each month will be "party night." The program is an expansion of the citadel's former Friday afternoon recreation.

Jury Denies Damages in Accident Case

One suit against the Journal Garage company of Portland was settled in Marion county circuit court Thursday and a new complaint was filed against the same defendant.

A jury verdict was filed against Beulah Carpenter after a three-day trial in which she was suing the garage company for $25,000.

She had alleged that she incurred personal injuries due to negligence of the company in a collision between their truck and a Pacific Greyhound bus Nov. 3, 1947.

A similar verdict was returned against Beulah Carpenter when she sued the bus company several months ago.

The accident that started the suits killed two persons and injured several others. A total of seven trials have been started in Marion county circuit court and two others in Multnomah county as a result of the accident.

Two verdicts have been returned against the bus company, one here and one in Portland. Two other claims were settled out of court by the bus company.
