Flannelette and Denims Take On New Smart Styling This Fall

By Mrs. Genevieve Smith

It's time to look into that winter sleepwear situation and everyday warm garments for your small fry, if you are a thrifty home sewer. The nice feature this year is that the fabrics for these garments now have taken on so much beauty along with their utility.

Take flannelette, long the standby for cozy sleep wear for any and every member of the family. This season you'll find it about as smartly styled as the better quality gingham used in dresses. Many beautiful plaids, windowpane checks, multi-color stripes, and the popular provincial type prints on dark grounds. In fact, the styling is so attractive that the volume of flannelette garments sold to college girls has increased appreciably. This includes many shirts and blouses as well as sleepwear. A novelty that struck the fancy of many college girls was an ensemble of a housecoat teamed with a bed-spread and draperies of the same dark print.

More attention has been paid to the patterns for the very small members of your family. All sorts of nurseryland characters and animals and many, many dainty flower prints are among the designs that bid for your attention in yard goods.

For active play there's nothing more serviceable for little boys and girls than denim coveralls. There's good news here, too—fast color, fully preshrunk denim is being woven in checks and plaids. These will be in addition to the solid colors, pin-check, and striped designs now in use.

For something a bit more dressy, there's corduroy. It also is available now in many printed patterns in yard goods, as well as a wonderful range of solid colors. In this material—as well as in flannelette—ask for fast colors and full preshrinking. Incidentally, all corduroy garments look better if they are allowed to drip dry. Wringing or pressing out the water crushes the pile.

Mrs. Baker attended her daughter's wedding in a blue ensemble with black accessories and corsage of vanda orchids. Mrs. Burgess wore a grey suit with black accessories and corsage of vanda orchids for her son's marriage.
