Candies For All Occasions Found Neatly Packaged

By Maxine Buren

It's difficult to realize, in this day of abundance, that only a few Christmases ago we were worrying about getting the proper gifts and foods for the holiday. I'm thinking particularly about candies. This year we're promised an even larger and more elaborate choice of confections than ever before, and goodness knows, we've had some fine years in the past. According to the association of national confectioner's propaganda "Enrobed in chocolate, or wearing colorful rainbow-hued jackets of shimmering sugar, fashioned in keeping with the joyous days for which they were prepared, and packaged in glistening multi-colored paper, foil or cellophane bags and boxes, these Yuletide confections now are making their appearance on candy counters in every nook and cranny of the land." A mighty elegant description of that fine assortment of sweets the grocers display, we'd say. Though you'd never know it from the words, the collection includes such old favorites jellybeans, ribbon candy, simulated peanuts, and all the other candies we can't do without at Christmas. The candy business has made quite a step even within a year or so. Now one goes into the grocery store and finds a collection of confections (usually placed near the cashier's desk). The selection is large, the display attractive. Prices are plainly marked, cellophane packages give a clear view of the contents. You can hardly resist buying some candy, and alas, one too often yields to the temptation. Of course there are still the fine chocolates and bonbons, salted nuts and other more expensive candies, but these too, usually come already packaged, and are passed across the counter at the drugstore, restaurant or specialty shop. The local candymaker (though we do have some in Salem) are the exception rather than the rule these days. The small candy kitchen is a thing of the past. So these days we may become more candy conscious, for there's certainly plenty had—proving that America's sweet tooth is just as sweet as ever.

On Etiquette

By Roberta Lee
Q. How does one give a cocktail party?
A. Invitations to these affairs are very informal, usually in person or by telephone. The usual hours are from five to seven p. m., or sometimes later to suit a special occasion. Cocktails and appetizers will also provide fruit juice for those who prefer it. Refreshments and conversation provide the entertainment.
Q. Should one ever select a wedding gift that is something only the bride can use, if one is not acquainted with the bridegroom?
A. No; always select something that can be used and enjoyed by both the bride and bridegroom.
Q. Should the man or the woman make the move to stop for conversation when they meet each other on the street?
A. It is up to the man to do this.

A Wednesday Night At Shattuck's

The place opens up at 5:30 p. m. and the dinner parties start coming in soon after. Before long the quiet, comfortable lounge is filling up with people enjoying Hors d'oeuvre and pleasant appetizers before ordering their dinners. Other diners have chosen their tables and having ordered, are conversing in the soft candle light, or watching the flames flickering in the fireplace. As the different courses are served the diners, the quiet music, the courteous service and the quantities of good food, the tempting odors of the generous cuts of delicious Roast Prime Rib of Beef au Jus, the sizzling of the steaks as they are brought to the tables on hot platters, the spicy tang of the Specialty Barbecued Crab, all combine to build up a feeling of well being. As the pleasant evening wears on, Francis Conger entertains at the piano, singing and playing all requests... the dancing starts in the Burgundy room and the later group of younger people and after the show crowd start coming in. The Burgundy room fills up with dancers and the games in the lounge are surrounded by younger folk laughing as friends miss shots on the goal. Good natured banter is passed back and forth about the past weeks' football games. The older parties gradually thin out and as the diners become fewer, Frances starts entertaining with her novelties and numbers. The kitchen closes at one o'clock, but the entertainment continues till two, and the dancing and service until two-thirty. As earlier crowds thin out, more people come in... folks who work the later hours come to relax and be entertained and take the edge off the more tiring late hours of work. At two thirty there is a flurry of talk and last minute good-bys, plans made for future visits, the donning of coats, and another pleasant evening at Shattuck's is over.
