Buildings Up for Airport Landing System

Final work in assembling the last of two prefabricated buildings to house radio equipment for Salem airport's new radio homing facility is shown above. Located just out of Turner about 4 1/2 miles east of the airport the radio marker will aid planes in landing during adverse weather conditions. At left is framework for a steel mesh anti-static system, and at right the radio building. (Statesman photo.)

New Landing System Near Completion

The new instrument landing system being installed for McNary field should be in operation by the end of the week, Charles Barclay, airport manager, said Tuesday.

Last of two buildings, to house radio equipment, was being erected Tuesday. It is located about 4 1/2 miles east of the airport near Turner. A similar radio building has already been set up near the east edge of the field.

Radio equipment is being installed this week, said Barclay. The new system will enable planes to land at the field more safely under low ceilings. The system is installed by the civil aeronautics authority.

The Silverton firm will manage

Death Claims Former Guard, Charles Allison

Charles Allison, former guard at the state penitentiary, died Tuesday in Salem after an extended illness. He was 68.

Allison was a guard at the state prison many years prior to World War II. During the war he was employed as a guard at several war plants in Portland. He retired about 1946.

Born Oct. 15, 1881, in Boone, Iowa, Allison came to Turner shortly after 1900. He married the former Alta Osborn, a native of Turner who survives him, in that city about 1911.

The couple homesteaded in Lincoln county several years before coming to Salem about 28 years ago.

Allison was a member of the Salem Rod and Gun club and of the Methodist church at Turner.

Surviving, besides the widow, are two sons, Osborne L. and Darrell H. Allison, both of Salem; a daughter, Mrs. G. R. Lowery, Salem; two brothers, Smith W. Allison, Corvallis, and Frank L. Allison, Corvallis; three sisters, Mrs. Ruth Grant, Harlan; Mable Woelke, Glendon Beach; and Mrs. Reva Brown, Cutler City; and seven grandchildren.

Funeral services will be arranged by the W. T. Rigdon chapel.
