Bartlett Tells Community Airport Plans

Construction of community airports within walking distance of small cities throughout Oregon is being contemplated by the state board of aeronautics.

W. M. Bartlett, board director, Wednesday night revealed this information at a meeting of the West Salem Lions club.

Bartlett said 37.6 per cent of all private planes in Oregon are owned by farmers who need landing fields near small cities.

Many of the proposed fields should be located in strategic recreation areas, Bartlett added. He did not reveal details of the proposed program.

The state director also said his board is attempting to get the federal aeronautics authority to change national regulations prohibiting establishment of airfields on public lands, such as forest areas.

Bartlett said Oregon leads the

Courthouse Beard Okehs Exterior Plans

Marion county courthouse commission Wednesday voted tentative approval of exterior plans for the proposed new county courthouse with the stipulation that the architect, Pietro Belluschi of Portland, make new studies of certain features.

Features of the plans which have met with doubt or criticism include the entrance to the building and the use of vertical louvers on south and west windows as a screen against sunlight and heat.

Belluschi suggested that thermopane glass might be substituted for the louvers, at less expense. He reported however that louvers are coming into greater use in places where sunshine is a factor.

As to the exterior, he advised the commission that its shape had been largely determined by the interior planning which had been directed toward meeting the needs of the county offices in the most practical manner possible and that it could not be materially altered without seriously affecting the interior arrangement on which the commission and courthouse officials were agreed.

Commissioner Roy Rice suggested going away with the overhank or portico on the front by moving the upper floors back. The architect said this would complicate the solution of the interior problem.

County Judge Grant Murphy referred to a number of letters that had been received regarding the plan, most of which were critical of the front elevation.

Belluschi produced pictures of noted public buildings, both old and new, in which the portico was used to good effect, and asserted that it gave distinction and dignity to the proposed building.

He said he would make new studies on suggestions offered and have them ready in a week or 10 days. Construction work is tentatively planned to start next year.

Turner Man Bound Over to Grand Jury

Maurice B. Murdock, Turner, was bound over to the grand jury after waiving preliminary examination in Marion county district court on a procuring charge Wednesday.

Murdock, former Salem taxi driver, is charged with pandering for a 14-year-old Salem girl. He is held at Marion county jail.

County Plans Candlewood Drive Survey

A survey of Candlewood drive by a member of the Marion county engineer's office will be made soon to determine the feasibility of grading and graveling the road.

Residents along the street lying just north of Salem between Cherry avenue and Pleasant View drive have petitioned the court for the improvements. The petitioners will bear the cost. The court Wednesday turned the matter over to the county engineer.

The court set January 6 as a date to hear a petition for vacation of a portion of the old Gates-Niagara road near Gates. The petitioners are Mr. and Mrs. Albert Millsap and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Titz. They state the road has not been used for over 10 years.

A hearing on a proposal to establish a diking district in the Keizer area slated to be heard Wednesday, has been postponed by the county court to December 9.

Despite a continued heavy claims load from western Oregon timber areas lumber and logging employment during the fall months has held remarkably steady, the commission was advised.

A few jobs are being offered by operators but the number of those at work is only about 3,000 under the 77,000 August-September peak. Increases to Continue.

The commission said increases in employment that started in October in textiles and apparel will continue through February. Only 100 additional workers will be required, however, to meet the demands.

The commission said there would be increases in retail hiring during the next few weeks because of the holiday season and these would partly offset layoffs by jobbers and others handling Oregon products for distribution elsewhere. Retail employment was expected to drop 8 per cent from December to February.

Construction employment already has fallen off about 10 per cent from the August highs but the winter-time low will be only 8 to 10 per cent under November levels, 65 firms reported to the commission.

Slowdowns Expected. Cannery layoffs during October and November, the commission said, affected about a fourth of the 25,000 employees in this industry at the height of harvest-time operations. Seasonal slowdowns during the remainder of the year were expected to bring further unemployment but the low should be considerably above the 12,000 reported last February.

The weather was somewhat chilly from the Dakotas to the Atlantic seaboard. The southern half of the country had mild temperatures with generally clear skies.

Sub zero weather nipped parts of northern New England Wednesday morning, but temperatures moderated somewhat during the day. Houston, Me., had a minimum reading of five below zero.

Freezing temperatures extended as far south as northern Florida early Wednesday, but the mercury then climbed rapidly.

An area of moderate to heavy snow was spreading eastward from

Unemployment Claims Higher Than in 1948

Some manufacturing and construction groups now have as many or more wreckers on the job than a year ago, although unemployment claims from their employes have been running two or three times as high as in the comparable period of 1948, state unemployment compensation officials announced Wednesday.

They predicted a continuation of the present demand for products in most lines would hold winter employment above the low levels reached last January and February. Trade and service jobs generally are about the same as a year ago, officials said.
