Dental Perfection Means Much to Appearance of Face Make-up advisor to the screen stars

HOLLYWOOD - (INS) - Anyone who has doubts about the practical value of regular trips to the dentist, even well before there is obvious and painful need for such visits, would be doing well to consider the dental attitude and practices of most of Hollywood's screen stars.

These screen stars don't relish going to a dentist any more than you do. But they do go regularly, and a great deal oftener than the average person does, because they know how much dental perfection contributes to the good looks which are their stocks in trade.

Too many women who aren't actresses assume that if they beautify their lips with lipstick to the highest possible degree they have done all they can along these lines. This is not so. Mouth beauty has not been fully achieved unless the teeth are also as attractive as they possibly can be.

It used to be that the main lack in beautifying care of the teeth was the failure to give them quite the degree of daily cleansing and conditioning attention which they should have. Today this is not generally so. Practically all women are now conscious of how essential such daily dental attention is, and teeth are now more unanimously attractive because of this fact.

The one major flaw in the dental scene today is the still evident general reluctance to periodically visit a dentist in order to antieipate and prevent the appearance of dental troubles. Most of us still follow the age-old practice of never going near our dentist until the need for his services becomes painfully obvious. This attitude is a human one, but is is also a foolish one. Practically all major dental operations could either be avoided or at least made minor ones if the conditions which made them necessary had been caught and corrected before they had a chance to develop.

Being so professionally conscious of the value of dentistry themselves, Hollywood's screen stars are consequently more than usually aware of the importance of keeping an eye on the growth, formation, and alignment of their children's teeth, and taking corrective steps as soon as need for them becomes evident. This is a practice which all parents could profitably follow.
