Nearly Cost Me MY JOB!

...until I discovered this New "Invisible Electronic Ear"

Nothing can ruin a man's business chances more surely than loss of hearing. People get the idea that you are growing stupid, slow-witted and old—ready for "the shelf".

But I stubbornly fought the idea of wearing a hearing aid. I rebelled against the thought, "button in the ear"—against dangling wires and clumsy battery packs.

Then a little book fell into my hands and changed my whole life overnight. The book told how the new Beltone "Invisible Electronic Ear" actually slies deafness—captures hearing a totally different way than the miracle of modern electronics. And NO BUTTON IN THE EAR!

Today I can hear clearly again—seven faintest whispers. No more office-mistakes and misunderstandings because I "couldn't hear". Thanks to the new Beltone, I can hear my own voice with ease—in business or anywhere else!

If you are hard-of-hearing, don't resign yourself to the handicaps that deafness brings. Come in, phone or send for the valuable FREE book on the new Beltone "Invisible Electronic Ear". No cost, no obligation. Do it now!

Snowbound Pleasures, Perils of Staying At Farm Told by Writer

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Woman's Editor.

Being snowbound over a week-end is a novel experience to us Oregonians. Of course an occasional sledful of snow from the long, old chickenhouse roof, which carries the owner of some urgent business, proving that we aren't really isolated. But for all the visitors who come, we are really snowbound.

Our handyman Alan, who stops daily on his return from school to check on our needs offers his services to scrape snow from the long, old chickenhouse roof, which has trouble enough standing of its own weight. Alan shovels us a neat little walk to the chickenhouse, just for special convenience.

We could sit inside and keep snug and warm, but ambition stings at queer moments. So we don wool pants, (fugitives from a brother's closet) high boots and a heavy shirt and brave the cold to repair a fence rail that's been down since someone tied a restless horse to it away back in September.

While out, we take a turn around the place, admiring the ice covered scenery along the creek. The swimming hole looks chilly, the picnic ground desolate. We wonder how soon after the thaw there'll be spring growth on the trees and shrubs, not long certainly.

Queen and her son Mo stare angrily at us through the gate, saying plainly that the lack of green grass is our fault. They eat a bale of hay daily, and though we use our Christmas manure fork diligently each day, and dig generously into the straw supply their bedroom seems unfit for bovine use.

Chickens, too, hold us personally responsible for the weather. The hens scream because their water is frozen, and no amount of fresh warm water brought from the house will vindicate us. They growl about the snow that sifts through the ventilators and cluck furiously because the floor is cold.

Ambition still remains after cold has sent us indoors, so we repair the latches on closet doors and finish the painting in the bedroom. Then we succumb to the warmth of the blazing fire in our little blue tile-covered Franklin stove and the deep old wing chair and settle ourselves with a mystery thriller. But the fascinating picture out the bay window draws attention. The sun makes dazzling jewels in the front yard, the first hanging heavy with white fluff, stand cold along the roadside. Away off across the rolling hills, some great oaks make a soft, lacy silhouette on the horizon.

Evenings are beautiful, too, for we turn on the floodlights and watch the gusts of wind make snow pictures through the window.

The chill of the air surprises us as we step outside for a moment on the way to bed. Looking off across the hills, we see one bright light, proof enough that others too, live in comfort even through icy days and nights.

Thankful are we, as we snuggle between fresh sheets, that we were chosen to enjoy contentment in a warm, modest little house against which wind and rain and ice and snow are ineffectual.
