Don't Look Now...

but... thank goodness for our faculty for hoping. Every time we see the eaves begin to drip, we imagine the cold spell is over. We understand, by the way, that the Russian atom bomb supposed to have exploded recently, is the cause of the cold weather. Their's must have been more potent than ours, which set off no such snowstorms.

Secret Passion... The difference between men and women is that women admit they like fancy hats. The only time the truth is revealed by the men is during unusual weather. The first bit of snow brings out a gay and often shocking lot of plaid ski caps with ear muffs, knitted GI caps with hills turned up, and slightly faded red hunting hats. No, the men aren't a bit vain.

Night life... There is one interesting aspect of the snow which continues, though the weather is otherwise tiresome. Each morning we marvel at the number of tracks registered in the night's fall of snow. As we go out to barn or chickenhouse in the morning we'll see half a dozen different tracks of birds and animals on the clean surface of the ground. One doesn't realize how many visitors come every night. Nothing to fear, unless you'd call the cat tracks those of a Peeping Tom.

Headin' Home... For once, the Circuit Rider seems to be going the right way. He's heading east again, seeking a warmer climate.

Never Know... We decided that our figure could stand a little paring, so went on a diet. The first week we lost 1 1/2 pounds, last time we weighed we had gained those back and an extra 2 pounds to boot. We would mind starving to death lots less if we lost weight doing it.
