Lamp Manufacturers and Stores Give Thought to Shades; Types, Colors

By Mrs. Genevieve Smith
There's something about a favorite lamp that endears itself to you — often it becomes as much an accepted feature of a room as a preferred easy chair. Or perhaps it's a treasured heirloom that has a great deal of meaning to you. The good news now is that before many weeks elapse you'll begin to see Mrs. Smith much greater variety in separate lampshades.

This greater attention to separate shades and replacement parts in general, is one of the outstanding features of the current lamp markets, to which store buyers are flocking by the thousands. And small wonder, for the industry has found that your preference for a lamp you now have accounts for shade sales that mount up to one-third of the total business.

In consequence today they are making many more different sizes of shades, and using at least a dozen different colors. This will mean that if you need one of the deeper colors as an accent in a room, before long you'll stand a good chance of getting it in a separate shade. Heretofore, white, eggshell and champagne constituted the principal choice, but now what is known as "decorator colors" — that is, much stronger colors — also are being made up.

Old Lamps Can Be Re-Styled
Another boon for homemakers who are freshening up lamps with new shades is that today they can be re-styled. As you know, for several years now there has been a decided trend toward larger table lamps — that is, lamps that are taller over-all. These are scaled down for today's smaller living rooms, of course, but the general effect of more height is there just the same.

In consequence, if your lamp is five or six years old, you may want to use a decor shade. Now you can do that by using a simple little gadget called a riser. This is a metal device that is attached to the shade frame from underneath the final or top decorative piece. Lamp departments are beginning to stock these pretty generally, or they can order them for you, since every shade manufacturer makes them up. They sell for about ten cents each.

Of course, if you have a deft pair of male hands in your family — man or boy — many a lamp can be heightened by the simple device of sawing out and painting a wood base. Satin black is a favored color, said base being just about the size of the lamp base of enough larger to make a step-up. This matter of size depends on the style of the base, of course.

Lamp Making Becoming a Hobby
With the great popularity of bases of pottery, wood, old kerene lamps, and the like, lamp-making is becoming a hobby that is winning recognition. Of course

Founder's Day Dinner Tuesday

The annual PEO Founder's Day dinner and program will be an event of Tuesday night at the First Congregational church at 6:30 o'clock. The affair was originally slated for January, but was postponed due to weather conditions. All five chapters of PEO in Salem are taking a part in arranging the affair. Unaffiliated PEO members in the city are invited to attend.

amount of flowing symmetry. In lamps, too, the ranch house school of architecture is wielding a lot of influence. You will see it soon in many bases of wood — a well grain oak being one of the favorites. Also in fairly simple pottery bases. Both of these usually turn to more substantial looking materials for their shades.

Floor lamps continue to be very important after their initial big comeback last year. Many of the bases are interesting and well designed. Another feature of many of the floor lamps is a fixture for the subdued lighting needed in a room when television is being viewed. A popular type is a bell - shape metal shade below the 3 or 6-way fixture. This shade inverted to cast a downward light from a small bulb of fifteen watts or so. It is designed and placed so that it does not interfere with the symmetry of the entire lamp.

If you are buying a lamp for the amount and quality of illumination as well as its purely decorative value, look for the "CLM" tag as well as the Underwriters' label. The Certified Lamp Manufacturers' tag is your assurance that it meets the lighting requirements of illuminating engineers. (Copyright, 1950, General Features Corporation) but . . . we just hope too many people don't start Dreaming of a White Christmas next year.

Down the drain . . . one of the funny stories of recent weeks is the one about the plumber. He was attempting to clean out a frozen drainpipe with a cable, which he kept feeding into the kitchen sink. Yards and yards went in, and still no results. He got madder and madder. The householder chanced outside, and looking up saw those yards and yards of cable waving around high above the roof. The cable had taken the wrong turn, up into the vent and out through the roof. The plumber's face was a study when she told him, that's one thing he won't forget.

Looking ahead . . . Our weather chart calendar made a few misses last week. It predicted "Snow and sleet," "threatening," "stormy" (that was Tuesday), "sleet," "snow or rain," "clearing" (that was Friday) and "fair." Now we'll have "changeable," "gales," "stormy," "snow or rain," "clearing," "colder" and "fair."

The payoff . . . If you all think frozen pipes are a trial, wait until they begin to thaw. . . Maxine Buren
