

Swiss Miss Nurses Navajos

Indian Love Song... Hedy and papoose...

By Jack Stevenson

GANADO, Ariz. — A year ago a little nurse in Switzerland dreamed of working with the Navajo Indians on their reservation in far away Arizona.

So she wrote a letter.

New 28-year-old Hedy Schmidheiny is caring for Indian patients in the famed Sage Memorial hospital here.

But there was much red tape to be snipped before Hedy, who was born in Balgach, Switzerland, could come to this country and realize her ambition.

Once here, Hedy quickly adjusted to the strange new life on the isolated reservation, says Dr. Clarence G. Salsbury, the Indians' "Mr. Big," superintendent of the hospital.

In his mail last spring, Dr. Salsbury found a letter from Switzerland — one that had been inspired when Hedy read about him in a borrowed copy of Arizona Highways magazine. She wrote:

"Dear Dr. Salsbury:
"I think you will be very surprised to get a letter from 'ar Switzerland. And who is writing this letter?"

"Well, I am a small Swiss girl, graduate hospital nurse, and many years ago I had the wish to live and work one day in the west of America. Then I heard and read of 'Dr. Big' and his Sage Memorial Hospital in Ganado, and since then I have the idea that it would be what I wanted. I always loved the nature, the horses, and I am very interested in Indians, too."

The sincerity of the letter moved Dr. Salsbury to request Miss Schmidheiny through the board of national missions of the Presbyterian church.

It appeared on one occasion that international law wouldn't permit the nurse to come to the United States. That obstacle was overcome.

Again he secretary of the department of educational and medical work wondered if Hedy knew the type of work for which she had asked. But the vivacious nurse replied:

"I like to watch the nature, climb up to the mountains, ride horses — you'll see — a regular half-Indian."

So the trip finally was approved. Hedy landed in New York last fall and the next day left for Ganado.

Dr. Salsbury wasn't disappointed. He described the new nurse as "small in stature but mighty in spirit." He said:

"Hedy is an accomplished violinist and an artist as well as being a fine nurse."

Dr. Salsbury figures she has all the background necessary for the rigorous job of nursing the Navajos.

More for Your Money Laundry-Proof Closures on Some Shirts, Blouses; Hidden Slide Fastener

By Mrs. Genevieve Smith

One of the things every homemaker knows is what trouble buttons can cause, particularly when they aren't there after a trip to the laundry.

So it undoubtedly comes under the heading of a modern advance when closures that are really laundry proof come into general circulation. One line of men's business shirts now uses slide fasteners under the conventional stitched pleat edge, plus the sturdy gripper snap fasteners on the collar band and cuffs. The snap fasteners on the cuff links. A smaller size, conventional style snap fastener is used at the neck.

How does the front of the shirt look with its hidden slide fastener underneath the pleat? With a tie you usually don't see a button anyway — so for all practical purposes when your good man is dressed for business the shirt looks the same. The slide fastener, developed especially for this use extends the full length of the pleat, and can be completely separated.

Incidentally, for laundering, the shirt should be left open — which is contrary to the usual procedure with slide fasteners, of course. But this is the recommendation of the Institute of Laundering with regard to this new advance in shirtcraft. Because of deft tailoring, the shirt pleats iron quite smoothly. These shirts are now in most department stores and haberdashery stores at about $4.

Women get a break in tailored blouses that now have buttons on a tape. These buttons go through buttonholes in both sides of the blouse. Being on a tape, they are easily removed before the blouse is laundered or dry cleaned. When shoulder pads are used, these also are easily snapped in and out — another big time-saving feature!
