

Oregon Planes Pause in Reno On Trip to Cuba

RENO, Nev., Feb. 25—(P)—Eighty-two light planes with some 240 pilots and passengers paused here and at Las Vegas tonight on their winter vacation flight from the Pacific Northwest to Havana.

The 7,881-mile journey being undertaken by the aerial caravan is the eighth such tour sponsored by the air-minded Portland, Ore., chamber of commerce.

The first of the planes started arriving here at noon, and others were stringing in all afternoon. Most of the faster ships, and even some of the slower ones, took off again for Las Vegas, 397 air miles south, to spend the night there. They had covered 545 miles on the trip from Portland to Reno.

Feels Like Havana
"This feels like Havana already," commented Warren Schisler, a Eugene, Ore., groceryman, who, with his wife is making his second chamber-sponsored air tour.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar M. Granum and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Myers, all of Reedville, Ore., also were impressed by an unseasonably warm sun here after a winter in the storm-plagued northwest. They took advantage of the good weather to fly out.

The Roy Munsons, who run a farm at Halsey, Ore., and their relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Munson, were among other early afternoon arrivals, along with Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Beaudry, who have a sawmill at White Salmon, Wash.

Accompanied by Daughter
The Beaudrys were accompanied by their eight-year-old daughter, Jerille, who claims she had her school books stored in the plane's luggage department.

Participants in the tour expect the cost to run $200 to $300 per person, but many—encountering Nevada's legal gaming tables for the first time—said jokingly they may be way off on their estimates.

The planes stop tomorrow night at Phoenix. Plans call for subsequent overnight halts at El Paso, Texas, Dallas, New Orleans, Jacksonville and Key West before the final hop to Havana March 4.

Butter Makers Given Changes In Regulations

Information on labeling changes necessitated by the recent court ruling that Oregon's compulsory butter grading law was unconstitutional have been sent to butter manufacturers and distributors during the past week, O. K. Beals, chief of the state agriculture department foods and dairies division, announced Saturday.

"Consumers should not feel alarmed because of this change since it will not affect any of the sanitary requirements," Beals averred. "Manufacturers strive to maintain a uniform flavor, body and texture which were the principal factors used in determining the grade so consumers may still purchase by brand the butter that suits their taste."

Beals said the dairy organizations asked the 1949 legislature to repeal the compulsory butter grading law but the bill failed in the senate after passing in the house. In asking for the repeal, Beals continued, the dairy industry pointed out that the compulsory determination of grades by taste was unreliable and unenforceable since expert graders differed in their opinions on the same sample of butter.

Protects Seller
Another reason given was that manufacturers could still use the voluntary federal grading service when selling to distant markets which protects the seller where grade is a competitive factor.

Beals pointed out, however, that in 1937 when the grading law was passed Oregon was a butter exporting state and the educational work on grading done by Oregon State college dairy department and the state department of agriculture following its passage did much to improve the quality of butter produced in Oregon at that time and aided in its sale in distant markets.

New Instructions
Butter manufacturers and distributors are now being instructed that:

1. Butter may now be sold without a labeled grade designation.

2. The Oregon consumer grade emblem must be removed from labels.

3. If a grade label or statement of grade (other than labels which designate a federal grade) appears on butter wrappers or containers, then a statement must also be made that it is the seller's private grade and this statement must appear on each panel that carries the grade label. Department approval is required for this type of label.

4. Labels must continue to bear the name and address of the manufacturer, packer or distributor and the net weight and the butter shall continue to contain not less than 80 per cent milk fat.

Fire Razes Fender Shop

Fire, fed by painting supplies and grease, gutted a fender and paint shop at 1565 Fairgrounds rd. early Saturday, city firemen reported.

The blaze started from sparks from a fender grinder which contacted fumes from a leaking gasoline tank. Equipment from north Salem and central fire stations fought the blaze.

The building was owned by Ben Lambert, and the shop was operated by Fred Painter and Rich L. Reimann, jr. Loss, including damage to a car, shop equipment, grease, paint, paint thinner and anti-freeze solution was estimated at $3,500. It was partially covered by insurance.
