Travel Letter No. 6 CHARLESTON, S. C. - Coming into Charleston it was natural to stop at the Hotel (Francis) Marion across the street from Marion Square. Similarity between Salem, Oregon, and this city ends there, however. For Charleston is the Old South, the south of rich history in war and peace, the South of gentle living yet of passion for principle, the South of States Rights now staging a party revival after the decision at arms over eight decades ago. Charleston is a proud city, proud of its position as a leading port city, proud of its great names, of its traditions, its institutions, its venerable homes and public buildings. It is also an ambitious city, seeking to embrace in business and science, at least, if not in politics, the fruits of modernity. Driving south is to accelerate the calendar. The ice about New York yielded to chill wind at Washington, to crocuses and hyacinths in Virginia, to the bursting redbud trees in the Great Swamp, to full-blown fruit trees in North Carolina and greening willows to the full breath of spring in Char- Death Ends leston; - genial sun, soft southerly winds, and gardens bursting with bloom.

This is the time of the Spring Garden tours for which the south is famous. Charleston has several that are world-renowned. The Middleton Gardens we visited are over 200 years old. Developed about the plantation house fronting the Ashley river above the city the gardens represent the planning and work of many generations

Armory Relocation Sought by Norblad KEY WEST, Fla., March 29-W.

The possibility loomed Wednesday that the army reserve armory recently authorized for Salem may be constructed next to the present naval and marine corps training center.

Present plans call for location of the armory on grounds adjacent to the state highway department shops on airport road. Congressman Walter Norblad UAL Expected however, Wednesday notified The Statesman that he has asked Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson to investigate the possibility of relocating the building. Norblad said several Salem residents have written him asking why the two training centers could not be built together to provide joint usage of certain facilities, such as rifle ranges, parking areas and

State-Owned

A state-owned gasoline station will begin operations in Salem Monday to service state vehicles. It will be located on State street near the state highway shops.

The station, authorized some time ago by the state board of control, will be operated by the state educational agency for surplus property.

Board of control members this week started discussions for possible development also of state states in his suit that on a certain parking. The state gas station will be Mondays through Fridays open from 7:3 a. m. to 6 p. m. and on Saturdays from 7:30 to noon.

Under the present setup the state buys its gasoline from privately-owned stations. Officials said the new system would save 3.9 cents a gallon of gasoline, and 3.5 cents per gallon of oil. Gaso-line will cost 21.5 cents a gallon. The station also will handle

bile accessories. Price Control Ban For National Gas Operators Voted

WASHINGTON, March 29-(AP)-The senate voted today to exempt Canby, suffered a possible skull natural gas operators in the field from any price controls by the federal power commission. On a 44 to 38 roll call tally it adopted a measure which would specifically bar the EPC from extending its rate regulations beyond the wholesalers who distribute the gas through interstate pipelines. Passage of the legislation climaxed two weeks of bitter debate centered maily around the price issue.
