

Airport Light Designations Listed by CAA

The civil aeronautics authority Wednesday designated the Salem airport beacon light as an official "truslight" to aid coastal air traffic navigation.

The announcement came from Airport Manager Charles Barclay, who also disclosed that other lighting changes have been made to improve the field's facilities.

Under terms of a temporary certificate issued by the CAA, the flashing beacon will be operated by CAA control tower personnel on a dusk-to-dawn basis. The light has been operated by a time clock which had to be set to coincide with seasonal light conditions.

Effective immediately, a flashing signal will be operated at night within the lighted "T" at the field to warn pilots of planes not on instruments that landings are not permitted because of bad weather conditions.

When the field is blanketed by bad weather during the daytime, the large rotating beacon will be turned on to prevent landings.

Camp Leave Requested For Guards

Gov. Douglas McKay Wednesday urged employers to permit all Oregon national guardsmen to attend summer camp without prejudice of their civilian work.

"These are critical times for our government," Gov. McKay averred. "With the knowledge that the national guard and the air national guard represent the backbone of our national preparedness, I earnestly call upon employers in Oregon to release their employees who are national guardsmen for two weeks this summer so they may attend the encampment."

Maj. Gen. Thomas E. Rilea, state adjutant general, reported that many employers were granting their employees military leave with full pay. Other employers not in a position to follow this program are being asked to grant annual vacation leaves during this period, Rilea said.

All Oregon national guard units will attend camp from June 10 to 24 this year. The 41st infantry division will move by truck and train to Fort Lewis, Wash., while the Oregon air national guard will fly to Walla Walla, Wash., for a two-week period.

Oregon and Washington anti-aircraft artillery will, meanwhile, be training at Camp Clatsop near Seaside.

Health Officer Outlines New Practices in Disease Curbs

Development of new practices in the isolation of communicable diseases were outlined to Marion county physicians this week in a letter from Dr. W. J. Stone, county health officer.

Dr. Stone called attention to pending revision of Oregon state health board's booklet "Control of Communicable Diseases." The statements are from the American Journal of Public Health.

The letter accompanies the weekly report of communicable diseases for April 2-8, which shows no new cases of whooping cough for the first time in about a month.

Chickenpox, however, showed an increase to five new cases, all in Salem. Others, with county totals, include impetigo 1, measles 1, mumps 2, bronchial pneumonia 4, virus pneumonia 2, ringworm 1, scabies 4, scarlet fever 2 and septic sore throat 1. Fifty of the county's physicians reported, comprising 54 per cent of the total.

The letter concerns the virus diseases—measles, German measles, mumps and chickenpox—pointing out that any effective means of prevention are in the experimental stage.

New regulations tried out in New Haven, Conn., use isolation to protect the patients from secondary bacterial infections rather than to protect other children from infection. Contacts are not excluded from school but are observed daily and sent home at the first sign of illness. The city has renewed emphasis on immunization and provides for booster shots every few years.

The article points out that spread of such diseases has not been halted by keeping at home children other than those sick. The ban on quarantines and shortened isolation periods prevents loss of so much school time and is more convenient for the families.

The health officer is seeking comments and suggestions for Oregon's revision of regulations, said Dr. Stone.
