Hatcheries' Production on Level with '49

By Lillie L. Madsen
Farm Editor, The Statesman

Despite rather unfavorable poultry price ratios, hatchery production in the Willamette valley continues to keep a pace with the relatively high output of 1949, week-end surveys made by the USDA show. An estimated 2,540,000 chicks were hatched in Oregon during April which is down but one per cent from the peak month of March and one per cent above the year ago hatch.

During April the number of turkey poult hatched in Oregon is estimated at 1,200,000 which is about 96 per cent of the April 1949 turkey hatch. The first three months of this year, the number of poult hatched was considerably below a year ago.

The rate of lay for the first four months this year has averaged slightly lower than during the corresponding period in 1949. In April, all hens and pullets of laying age averaged 18.9 eggs per layer compared to 19.3 eggs in April 1949.

More Than Year Ago
Oregon egg production during April is estimated at 50 million, one million more than a year ago but a million below the March total.

Prices of chickens and eggs continue low in relation to the price of poultry feeds. Chickens averaged 24.2 cents per pound in mid April, compared to 31.5 cents in April a year ago.

United States poultry storage stocks of poultry continue high. Early in May stocks were the largest since 1947 for this month. Compared to a year ago, total poultry holdings are 87 per cent more.

West coast turkey holdings are also high—145 per cent more than a year ago on this same week-end.

Too Plentiful
Egg markets in the three coast states have been fairly steady on top grade eggs during the past seven days. Supplies have not been too plentiful in some quarters. But eastward egg markets have been weak with supplies heavy most of the time. In the three coast states cold storage holdings of shell eggs have not increased so much as for the nation as a whole. Better than three-fourths of the coast storage holdings of shell eggs are in California. Oregon supply is somewhat less than a year earlier.
