Experts Give Pointers on Keeping Ready Made Mixtures, Reveal Tests

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Woman's Editor

The U. S. department of agriculture comes up with some interesting material in this month's bulletin.

Tests made in one experiment station reveal that even when kept in the refrigerator, cooked potatoes lose from one-third to one-half of their vitamin C in 24 hours. So, the cook who saves time by cooking potatoes in quantity and keeping them, causes loss of this important vitamin in the food.

The loss is not so important to the family which gets its vitamin-C in another way, through citrus fruits or green cabbage for instance. But in low cost diets, in which potatoes form much of the nutrition, the loss of vitamin C may be important.

In a survey in 1948 it was found that only two per cent of the family food dollar goes to potatoes, yet they contribute 11 per cent of the vitamin C in family diets.

Advice is given by the department of agriculture to housewives who like to make up their own mixes and store them, about how best to keep the prepared mixes. If care is taken that shortening used in the mixes is marked "needs no refrigeration" or "keep at room temperature," experts have found that the mixes will keep well for six months in closely covered containers at room temperature.

Bacon fat or meat drippings can be used in the mixes but should be utilized promptly or kept in refrigeration for a relatively short time.

Nonfat dry milk, or skimmilk powder keeps longer than dry whole milk.

The bureau of agricultural and industrial chemistry of the department of agriculture have been working on the use of antibiotics plus a mild heat in preserving foods. They find that minute quantities of subtilin will kill some of the most important food-spoiling bacteria under conditions that would otherwise promote their growth. Practical tests show that less than an ounce of subtilin will preserve a ton of food products.

While canners now process non-acid foods by cooking under pressure at 250 degrees for 30 to 60 minutes, under the newer but yet unperfected method, the food will remain good when cooked at 122 degrees or lower, for 8 to 10 minutes. Adaptation of the process for home canners seems, the experts say, far in the future.

Subtilin, which is not yet produced commercially, is a protein-like substance, produced by a harmless bacterium in somewhat the same manner as penicillin is produced in mold.

Visitors at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Estill Brunk have been her mother, Mrs. Guy Johnston of Portland, and her niece, Miss Barbara Young of Astoria. Miss Young accompanied her grandmother to Portland for a visit.

Mr. Everett Clark won first for the Oak Knoll Lady golfers at the regular ladies day play on Wednesday. Mrs. Elmo Bennett and Mrs. Paul Wishart tied for second place. Golfers will tee off at 10 a.m. next Wednesday.

GERVAIS — Miss Zellamae Luthy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Luthy of Gervais, was married on May 27 at the home of her parents, to Paul Cunningham of Aberdeen, Washington, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Cunningham of Eureka, California.
