Seattle Port Restrictions Are Tightened

SEATTLE, July 4—(P)—The Seattle port of embarkation tightened restrictions for "security reasons" today and simultaneously barred a number of longshoremen from further work at the installation.

Maj. Robert B. Ekvall, SPOE public information officer, said effective immediately only CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union members possessing navy work permits would be admitted to the port.

The army previously did not require dockworkers to have permits, he said. Ekvall pointed out the navy began denying permits to some Seattle longshoremen a year ago.

Ekvall said there are about 1,500 longshoremen in Seattle and that a total of 180 have been denied passes. The army has asked the navy to re-screen those dock workers who do not have permits.

Four longshoremen were refused admittance when a 65-man crew reported for work early today, Ekvall said.

William Gettings, regional CIO longshore directors, described the action as "useless." He added: "The passes are no security. A real saboteur could easily forge a pass and spend two days in there (the port) and no one would know anything about it."

Residents Use Wrong Number For Questions

A lot of residents got fires and fireworks mixed up Tuesday night—and the city switchboard and radio operator bore the brunt of the consequences. Nearly 50 calls reportedly were received on the city phone number reserved exclusively for reporting fires. And all of the callers wanted to know if a public fireworks display was to be staged in Salem during the evening. Authorities pointed out that the number listed in the phone directory for reporting fires should never be used for anything else.

Serious Reflections on Danger To World Peace Sets Somber Note for July 4th Celebrations

By The Associated Press America celebrated the long ago birth of its own freedom on a somber note yesterday while U. S. troops fought on foreign soil to save the independence of communist-invaded south Korea. President Truman set the mood of serious reflection on the dangers to world peace as he passed the day quietly in his temporary residence at Blair house.

Mr. Truman had no engagements scheduled and was reported keeping in close touch with development in the Korean war crisis. Echoes of the far Pacific struggle reached into the Pentagon, and other key federal agencies where thousands of government workers gave up the Fourth of July holiday to work.

Weather Close to Ideal But elsewhere—on thousands of beaches, picnic grounds, baseball parks, in cities and vacation spots—Americans sought to dispel fears of another great war and celebrated with the additional "glorious Fourth" devices of hot dogs, soda pop and fireworks.

The weather was reported close to ideal over most of the nation, with generally clear skies and temperatures ranging from pleasantly warm to broiling hot. In Washington, a night fireworks display around the Washington monument featured huge portraits of George Washington and President Truman bridged by an arch of fire spelling out the legend "Faith of Our Fathers."

At United Nations headquarters in New York, top-level officials worked throughout the holiday on a plan to coordinate UN action to end the Korean war.

Meeting Set Thursday The security council is expected to meet again Thursday to consider the coordination plan, on which details have still to be worked out.

Under UN auspices, the "Voice of America" and the British Broadcasting company began a news bulletin service, opening with a statement that governments with more than 1,000,000 population are backing the UN effort to end the Korean conflict.

In far-off Manila, the Philippines celebrated the fourth anniversary of their independence and, with anxious attention to the Korean war, they heard President Quirino warn of the "not too far distant threat to Philippine independence."

At Azusa, Calif., Navy Undersecretary Dan Kimball told an Independence Day crowd that fear is America's great potential enemy. Then, referring to the Korean war, he declared: "No compromise with Reds." "To turn back from the course which we have charted would be an admission of fear. We cannot

M-G-M has filmed, with all of the power and realism of its command, W. R. Burnett's exciting novel that surpasses even "Little Caesar." John Huston directed it with the genius that won him two Academy Awards.
