Name Change Protested by KOG Leader

A suggestion to change the slogan "Keep Oregon Green" to "Keep Oregon Green and Clean" is being protested by the Keep Oregon Green association, Albert Wiesendanger, executive secretary, declared Monday.

Wiesendanger said the "Keep Oregon Green" association was organized in 1941 by a group of citizens who desired to do their part in helping reduce the number of man-caused fires in Oregon's forests and range lands.

He suggested in place of confusing the "Keep Oregon Green" slogan that sponsors of the new slogan use the words "Leave a Clean Camp."

When Life Begins at 65: Supplemental Federal Pensions Declared Essential for Welfare

(Third of Six Articles on Problems of the Aged)
By Clarke Beach
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Administration leaders in Washington think that Americans' best hope of being assured at least a minimum income in their old age is an almost universal extension of the Old Age and Survivors' Insurance (OASI) program of the social security system.

Pension plans in private industry are becoming continually more numerous and more liberal, but the government men don't think they are a true substitute for OASI. They don't feel that even federal and other governmental employe pension systems offer so much security to the worker.

If practically everybody were covered by OASI, they point out, there would be almost no need for any other old age assistance. Everybody would be provided for, no matter where he had worked.

Complications Are Cited
But if, instead of the only national system, large groups of the population have to depend on other types of pensions, here is what may happen, in their view:

1. Many companies will be too small or poor to adopt pension plans. Companies which adopt them might later get into financial difficulties and be unable to keep them up. In a bad depression many of these companies might go bankrupt, and even insurance companies which handle pension business might be unable to meet the payments. The elaborate pension plan of the railroads broke down completely when the roads got caught in the depression of the early 1930s. Congress had to create the present government-regulated railroad retirement system.

2. Only a fraction of workers covered under pension plans in private industry will ever draw their pensions. The worker population shifts, and as employes transfer from one company to another they lose all or most of the benefits of their pension plans. Workers, also, are constrained to refuse new and better jobs which do not provide pension systems.

3. Government and railroad retirement pension systems do not offer complete security, since workers might transfer into other uncovered fields.

4. If workers, in quest of jobs, have to shift often from covered to uncovered employment they cannot accumulate credits which assure them an adequate pension. OASI benefits are based on the length of time an employe serves in covered employment and the average salary earned.

35,000,000 Are Eligible
Of the 60,000,000 persons now in the labor force, about 35,000,000 are covered by OASI. The House of Representatives passed a bill last session to revise the social security system. It would place 10,700,000 more persons in covered employment. The administration wants an additional 9,600,000 jobs covered, making a total of about 55,400,000.

A PENSION HEARING brings a crowd that calls for cops.

The present OASI system is now paying benefits to about 1,800,000 persons of 65 or older. Most of them are in the industrial areas. The fewest are in rural areas, since agriculture is not covered employment.

The average monthly payment is $26. The maximum monthly benefit for a single person is $45.60. If the worker has dependents the maximum can go as high as $85. The proposed revisions would raise the benefits 70 to 80 per cent. The maximum would become $150.

Others Average Less
The average monthly payment to persons drawing pensions from private industry plans amounts to about $50, according to Social Security Administration experts. In covered employment, this usually is paid in addition to OASI benefits. Some systems, such as that of the United Mine Workers, pay a retired employe $100 a month after 20 years of service, in addition to social security benefits. Others, such as the Ford-United Automobile Workers' (CIO), pay $100 including OASI benefits.

Under some of the private industry plans the employer pays the full cost of pensions. Under OASI, however, employer and employee each contribute 1 1/2 per cent of payroll. The money contributed is kept in a treasury fund, invested in government bonds. The fund now amounts to about $11,000,000,000.

PGE urges early completion of Pacific Northwest POWER DAMS

You are living in the fastest growing region in the country. Oregon's population has increased almost 60% since 1941. Thousands of new homes have been built, hundreds of new industries have sprung up, expansion and modernization is to be seen everywhere. Everybody is busy "catching up" with this region's unprecedented growth.

Such growth demands electricity in abundance. Already the Pacific Northwest is the most highly electrified area in the nation, with 86 major power dams and 12 multi-purpose dams in existence. The average home and farm uses three times as much electricity as the national average.

Electricity is the lifeblood of this growing region and new supplies are needed. Government and private agencies are expending millions of dollars for Northwest power projects. Congress already has authorized 12 major dams, and many others are recommended in a carefully coordinated power, irrigation, navigation and flood control plan.

PGE believes that government has a place in the sound and economic development of our rivers. PGE, too, has a major part in the job of creating and distributing electricity, at fair prices, to the people.

And with governmental and private agencies working as a team in an atmosphere of cooperation, the development of our natural resources can be advanced at maximum speed. To that end PGE wholeheartedly supports early completion of the multi-purpose river projects authorized by Congress for the Pacific Northwest.
