NEW YORK, July 16-(AP)-The American Broadcasting Company said tonight its correspondent with American forces in Korea had reported that "the air strip at Taejon is all but deserted except for a handful of American troops."

The A.B.C. reporter, who was not identified by name, also said "Communist spearheads are rapidly approaching Taejon" but that the city "is still in American hands."

The correspondent's report, received here at 10 p. m. (EST), said "A communist force has raced down the west coast far south of our left flank after crossing the Kum river near its mouth."

TOKYO, Monday, July 17-(AP)-Waves of North Korean troops burst from the Kum river bridgehead Sunday night behind a fierce artillery barrage and drove U. S. infantry back six miles toward imperiled Taejon

A field dispatch said the heavily-outnumbered U.S. soldiers were pressed back by "hordes" of red troops, who came on in unstoppable numbers despite the heavy cost.

But on the other side of the picture General MacArthur's communique said the South Korean army had administered "two of the most conclusive setbacks" to communist forces on the eastern from since the outbreak of the war. He said the southerners on the east, supported by U. S. artillery, drove the communists back "in dis-organized retreat" in the Yongdok area of the east coast, which "resulted in catastrophe" for the invaders and that in the Yechon area 55 miles northeast of Taejon the South Korean 21st regiment halted a North Korean force "dead in its tracks." the bundle on her head and uses

U. S. tanks supported the infantry in the bloody fighting on the vital Kum river front before Taejon. Some were hit by a new high velocity antitank rifle that drilled a hole through armor more than an inch thick. At least one tank was abandoned.

Associated Press Correspondent William R. Moore reported that some American units had to run through a hail of red mortar and small arms fire to reach new positions.

Red snipers infiltrated behind the American positions and harassed lines all the way to raejon, wh of the front (nine miles from the new front today). Fate of Taejon Apparently in Doubt

Moore said that so far as was known, the communists still had no tanks across the 200-yard-wide Kum this morning.

Moore said, perhaps significantly, that "Taejon has not yet fallen." The city of 100,000 has served both as an advanced U. S. military base and as a refugee capital for the South Korean government. There have been no reports that the city has been lost. The dispatch seemed to reflect, however, the uncertainty on the front.

The North Koreans had reached the south bank Saturday morning that "reactivation of the security in the Samgyo sector, a dozen air miles west of the Choichiwon-Taejon highway bridge.

Associated Press Correspondent Leif Erickson reported from the field that the American Nineteenth regiment withdrew in good order after a brilliant two-day stand at the bridge against bitter frontal, flank and infiltration attacks by a red force at least five times as numerous. MacArthur's communique identified the attackers as the North Korean Fourth division.

Communists Blasted from Bridge

At one time Sunday afternoon, Erickson related, the communists brought tanks up to the north bank level while their infantry desperately tried to plug two gaps in the concrete bridge with logs and planks. A quick call for air support brought Mustangs which rocketed out two more spans on the north side, thus effectively blocking the tanks.

By Sunday night, however, the Americans had to withdraw, after inflicting heavy casualties on the enemy.

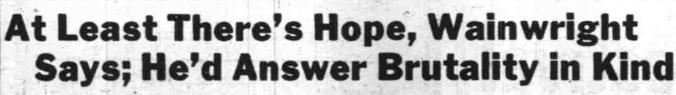

The communist radio at Pyongyang said Sunday night the reds had occupied Mungyong, 12 miles north of Hamchang and 43 miles north of Kumchon. Kumchon is an important railhead whose capture would cut the U.S. supply line between Puson and Taejon. Mac-Arthur claimed, however, in a communique issued about nine hours before the red broadcast that the communists were still north of Mungyong.

The fire broke out about 10:15 MacArthur speculated the reds may be trying to drive a wedge a.m. in an SP & S flatcar parked between the American and South Korean sectors.

Meanwhile U. S. supply stock piles are building up in South Korea, General MacArthur said Sunday night supplies were moving into Korea so fast that stockpiles are beginning to appear near the front lines.
