Weathermen in New Salem Airport Quarters

Perhaps Salem weather reports will be better suited to local residents in the future if surroundings have anything to do with the weatherman's predictions. Here is the new weather bureau set up in the city's airport administration building. Weathermen M. S. Main, standing, and J. A. Schlieski are still busy getting their new quarters straightened around during their day shift Thursday, and their prediction for today is fair and warmer. (Statesman photo.)

Additional Help Approved for Hospital Training Program; Hillcrest, Boys School Lauded

A request from Dr. Charles E. Bates, superintendent of the Oregon state hospital, asking employment of two additional practical nurses and a clerk typist in connection with the training program for hospital aids, was approved Thursday by the state board of control meeting in Salem.
Employment of these persons would extend the program from 39 to 152 hours. Roy Mills, board secretary, said the additional personnel was required to permit a well-rounded training program.
A letter to the board from Richard Clendenen, federal security agency, praised operations at both the state boys' school and Hillcrest school for girls.

"I want to take this opportunity to tell you how pleased I am with the developments which are apparent in the training school programs in Oregon," Clendenen wrote.
"The new physical plant at Hillcrest is outstanding and Oregon certainly spared no expense in providing the school with the very best. I also was impressed by the competent leadership at the boys school."
Governor Douglas McKay told the board there apparently is a lot of waste in the publication and distribution of annual and biennial reports by state departments. He suggested that the number of copies and size of these reports be reduced. The governor's comment was in connection with a report of the state banking division which A. A. Rogers, state superintendent of banks, said had been reduced in size because of the cost of printing.

Secretary of State Earl T. Newbry suggested that the next legislature be asked to take some action cutting the expense of printing and distributing these reports.
Employment of an additional nurse at the state school for the deaf was opposed by Newbry. He said the children there are healthy and the cost of another nurse apparently was not justified at this time. Action on the request was deferred.

Grade School Teachers Are Now Plentiful

MONMOUTH, Ore., July 20 (AP)—The state director of elementary education today predicted there would be no shortage of grade school teachers in Oregon this year.
Dr. Roben J. Maaske, who also is president of Oregon College of Education, told 780 teachers at a college summer session here that a recent school survey proved reassuring.
There will be approximately 1000 teacher openings in grade schools, and 1175 available to fill the jobs, he said.
The situation has improved so much that many districts no longer will hire teachers lacking certification, as was done in the past few years, he said.

Considerable Material Goes For Schools

The Oregon educational agency for surplus property received from the federal government during June materials and equipment valued at $241,552.40, agency officials announced at a meeting here.

10 per cent of their listed value. The report of the agency showed that June consignments included $70,908.86 from the army, $144,593.47 from the navy and $18,998.07 from other federal agencies.
The state agency revolving fund contains a balance of $46,342.11.
Officials said school districts are clamoring for these materials and equipment which they are able to acquire at a cost far below the retail value.

Bank Assets Found Close To 1 1/2 Billion

Assets of all banks in Oregon, both state and national, on June 30, 1950, aggregated $1,467,590,236.17, A. A. Rogers, state superintendent of banks, reported to the state banking board here Thursday.
Of these assets $183,039,316.88 represents banks and trust companies under jurisdiction of the state banking department. Assets of the national banks totaled $1,284,550,919.32. Deposits of state banks showed a gain of $6,897,134 and national banks $9,841,206.
Rogers advised the banking board, under questioning, that state banks are under more effective restrictions and control than national banks. There are 82 state banks in Oregon at the present time.
