Trespasses on State Forest Lands Curbed

Timber trespasses on state forest lands, following vigorous field inspections and checks of the forestry department's 250 active timber operations, have been liquidated satisfactorily with the exception of three pending cases in northwest Oregon which are now being processed, State Forester George Spaur announced Saturday.

"Out of some 250 active timber sales we have had only 19 trespasses during the past two years," Spaur said. Most of these, Spaur averred, affected only small volumes of timber with several of the trespasses involving only six or eight scattered trees.

More than 99 per cent of the operators, Spaur said, are responsible and have leaned over backward in cooperating in forest fire protection and forest conservation act compliances.

Price Spiral Blamed

Spaur blamed the "fantastic" spiral of stumpage prices as responsible for the trespass cases occurring on state forest lands. He said no losses of county or state revenue resulted, as trespass cases were settled by a payment of double stumpage penalties by the operator. Spaur added, however, that the high stumpage prices increased the local counties' receipts from the sale of the salvage timber of state forest lands. He also stressed the importance of cleaning up the burned and cut-over state forests which is now possible with higher prices and increased utilization of heretofore discarded parts of the tree.

The forester said the forestry headquarters at Forest Grove handles all timber sales in the northwest area, including the Tillamook burn, while the remainder of the 657,000 acres of forest lands are administered from the Salem office. A total of 11 timber sale foresters, not including the field inspectors and wardens who also check on state forest lands, have been assigned to this work.

Next Auction at Salem
Spaur reported that the next large timber sale by the state would be by oral auction at Salem on September 11, covering 31,000,000 board feet of timber located in eastern Marion county.

The timber has been broken down to species with minimum prices as follows:
21,500,000 Yellow Fir at $20 per thousand board feet, 8,400,000 Hemlock at $3 per 1000 board feet, 100,000 Noble Fir at $8 per 1000 board feet, 200,000 White Pine, at $8 per 1000 board feet and 100,000 Red Cedar at $3 per 1000 board feet.
The department also announced it would hold an oral auction August 18 at Veneta to sell 2,883,000 feet of timber in Lane county.

Girl Missing From Silverton Found at Bend

Carol Bailey, 15-year-old girl, who had been reported missing since Tuesday from Silverton, was located Saturday afternoon by state police officers in Bend.

Details of the girl's whereabouts during the past four days were not known here Saturday. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Bailey of Anacortes, Wash., she was visiting a sister, Mrs. Albert Edwards, in Silverton when she disappeared.

Mrs. Edwards reported to police officers that the girl had left Silverton by bus Tuesday, apparently bound for Mt. Angel. She did not go to Mt. Angel but visited in Salem, contacting Catholic Charities here, and then was not heard from until Saturday.

Police said Edwards would go to Bend Saturday night to pick up the girl.

State Tabulates Questionnaires On Pay Scales

The state civil service commission announced Saturday it is tabulating returns on questionnaires recently sent to private employers throughout the state to determine comparative wages of the state and private industry.

These returns to date represent 100,000 employees.

It was indicated that returns from the questionnaires would be used in considering any salary adjustments for state workers at the 1951 legislature.

The state budget director has informed Oregon State Employees association officials that although budgetary provisions for salaries are being kept at a minimum there will be funds available for regular merit increases during the next biennium.
