Don't Look Now...

but... even our co-worker, Jeryme Bridal-editor English is a bit green around the gills from this year's overwhelming crop of brides. We have left word with the first aid crew that if she collapses on the street, she should be laid out carefully, a cold wet fingertip veil be put on her forehead and a double strand of pearls (gift of the groom) be placed tightly around her neck. A bouquet of stephanotis, white bouvardia and rosebuds (centered with an orchid, nacherly) should be placed upon her chest, and something old and something blue should be given internally. Then upon hearing the strains of Lohengren, she should recover — or maybe not, anyway it will all be over by then.

Believe me... We'll bet that fellow who got all the notoriety for having eliminated a swarm of hornets by inhaling them into the vacuum sweeper, left his wife holding the bag.

Coming or going... A car with several sets of skis, a lawn rake and a broom on top was seen this week. Not a bad idea, they can pick up the skiers if they land in shreds or completely reduced to dust.

In the wild blue yonder... When adding the final period to this little item, we start on our vacation. This year, after 14 years of writing a daily column whether here or not plete rest having prepared no columns to fill in when we are gone. Fourteen years, we say, except for a month's unexpected interlude last fall, when we assumed a position on our back not ordinarily chosen as best for efficient handling of a typewriter. It took us all those years to find out that other writers let the remainder of the staff fill up the paper when they're gone. So not it's goodbye to the worries of a business career and hello to the carefree life.
