

Guy N. Hickok Will Become 1st National Vice President; Ontario Man to Succeed Him

Guy N. Hickok, manager of the First National bank in Salem, will become vice president of First National's state-wide organization and A. A. Atherton, president of the State Bank of Malheur county, will succeed him as manager of the Salem branch, it was announced Tuesday.

The change is to be effective October 16. Hickok is to maintain his headquarters in the Salem bank.

The announcement came from Frank N. Belgrano, jr., president of the First National Bank of Portland.

A. A. ATHERTON

Atherton, now a resident of Ontario, is to arrive in Salem in mid-October. He began his banking career in 1934 with the old Ontario bank, and became associated with the State Bank of Malheur county four years ago. The bank became an affiliate of First National last year.

"Atherton will fit into Salem affairs readily and is sure to become one of the leaders in helping with the progress of our city," Hickok said.

Hickok has been active in Oregon banking circles for 36 years, serving with the state bank examiner and the reconstruction finance corporation. He joined the First National system in 1933 and came to Salem in 1940.

In announcing the changes, Belgrano said:

"As a vice president of our state-wide banking organization, Hickok will continue his record of outstanding service to our customers in the Salem area. We are pleased also to obtain a man of Atherton's calibre to fill the management vacancy. Hickok's promotion and the addition of Atherton to the executive staff have been necessitated by the expanded activities of our bank in keeping pace with Salem's growth in recent years."

Cornerstone Rites Set At Highway Building

High state officials will gather in Salem today for ceremonial laying of the cornerstone for the new $1,500,000 state highway department office building on North Capitol street.

Playing the principal parts in the 1:30 p.m. ceremony will be Ben Chandler, Coos Bay, highway commission chairman, and Gov. Douglas McKay. The program will be staged at the building's northwest corner.

There Are All Kinds of Interesting Things Going on in Salem

A photographer has a great time in Oregon's capital. For instance (upper left), he found that, lacking a crane, a Southern Pacific crew loads rails by carrying them to a flatcar and sliding them aboard via an incline made of two other rails. And then he watched surfacing of the new link joining South Liberty and Commercial streets (upper right) which will carry one-way traffic into Salem from the south via widened South Liberty street. A paving machine is applying a new surface dumped from a truck. The lower photos (left to right) portray 6-year-old first-grader Fletcher Shirley of Bush school tarrying a bit en route home (360 Leslie st.) to watch cement-form construction of a new building for the state school for the blind on Mission street; little Karen Hood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hood of 465 Columbia st., watching her 23 pounds being recorded on Ladd and Bush bank's scales which has been giving out weights free for 30 years at an average which Bank Chiefstain D. W. Eyre said had been checked at once every minute; 3-year-old Bobbie Beckett of Oregon City visiting his aunt, Mrs. S. D. Hoffman of 135 W. Boice st., looking admiringly at the Oregon State college football mannequin in the Anderson Sporting goods store on Commercial street—untroubled by the fact his own sweater denotes a three-year letterman from rival University of Oregon; and little Jimmie Marr, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Marr of 465 S. College st., Monmouth, who, despite being in full-fledged cowboy outfit of his own, isn't quite certain he likes being astride the life-like horse at the Shafer Leather Goods store. Yes, Salem is an interesting town, pictorially as well as otherwise. (Photos by J. Wesley Sullivan, Statesman news editor).
