State to Open Bids on North Santiam Work

Another step in the modernization of the North Santiam highway will be taken at state highway commission meetings Thursday and Friday in Portland.

Bids will be opened for grading a stretch of about nine miles between Mehama and Mill City. At Mehama the new grade lies about one-fourth mile north of the present road, crosses the Little North Fork of the Santiam and proceeds southeast along the north side of the Santiam to Mill City.

The grading is to provide a 38-foot roadway constructed to modern standards and is to be completed by mid-summer of next year. Construction of a new bridge across the river is expected to begin in 1951.

The highway commission also will receive bids for construction of structural steel spans of the new Center street bridge across the Willamette in Salem. And bids will be asked for placing about 37,000 cubic yards of gravel material in embankment within limits of the proposed new relocation of the Salem-Dallas highway in west Salem. The material will be used for roadbed construction in connection with the new Marion and Center street bridge approaches and for the proposed new highway route through west Salem between Edgewater street and the river.

River Basin Data Gathered

Just how much information is available on the river basins of Oregon will be answered at a meeting of Gov. Douglas McKay's advisory committee on natural resources Wednesday.

The governor explained his group wants to avoid any unnecessary expense in surveys. Wednesday's meeting will be attended by representatives of the federal production and marketing administration, forest and soil conservation services and the Berkeley, Calif., offices of a federal survey group which has been working on an over-all study of the Columbia basin.

Mounting Relief Load Faces Catholic Charities in Salem

"Whether they be home folk or transients down on their luck, we always try to give a prompt and helping hand," said Mrs. D. J. McLellan, executive secretary of the Catholic Charities of Salem, in explaining some of the uses of money received from Community chest.

The chest goal this year is $111,000. General soliciting campaign opens next week.

"Our direct welfare work is with local people who have suffered reversals and transients who need immediate help before they can secure work. In this work we should mention the fine cooperation given us by the Salem police. Sometimes they find deserving people who are in desperate need and they never hesitate to call on us and we in turn never fail to respond to their summons.

"Every cooperation is offered other agencies engaged in social and welfare work. We make referrals to Christie Home for girls, St. Mary's school for boys and when we have children under five they are sent to Our Lady of Providence home. These institutions are financed under the state chest program.

"We make a specialty of seeking other foster homes for dependent children. This is one of our most important programs under which we handle only Catholic children. This work is not connected, however, with the chest.

"As an indication of where some of the chest money goes I might cite the records dealing with relief. In 1948 we served 667 persons, in 1949 we helped 940 and in the first 10 months of this year, 1271 have received help. Despite our prosperity, the relief load grows. And when we give aid it is justified because we check every application carefully."

Slayers Set For Supreme Court Hearing

Hearings of two men under death sentence for first-degree murder have been set by the state supreme court for next week. Both murders were committed in Portland and both pleaded insanity as a defense in the Multnomah county circuit courts.

A case of Robert Edgar Garver, convicted of shooting Angell Abbott during a holdup Jan. 3, 1949, will be heard next Tuesday. Two other men participated in the crime, pleaded guilty to second-degree murder and received life sentences.

On Wednesday the court will hear the appeal of Morris Leland, ex-state hospital inmate, convicted of beating and stabbing 15-year-old Thelma Taylor on Aug. 5, 1949.
