

County Crews Fixing Scio, Stayton Road

Statesman News Service
STAYTON—Linn county crews have been working to improve the Stayton-Scio road. Biggest improvement is being carried out at the end nearest the Stayton bridge where the bad curve is being eliminated.

A new grade is being given this portion of the road, as far south as the foot of the hill. It will have a top 30 feet wide, of crushed rock, according to W. J. Kelly of Scio, foreman.

The road all the way to Scio is receiving more stone. An estimated 12,000 yards of rock already have been spread. Ira Rinker, crusher superintendent, said.

A gravel bar in the river just above the Stayton bridge is supplying rock for the operation. A county-owned portable crusher outfit there is processing the rock.

The crusher is expected to continue in operation until high water. Last Friday saw a rise in the river that put water over most of the bar, but the crusher continued to operate despite water which covered the lower end of some of its belts.
