Family Friend

Telephone Is Always There When It's Wanted; Nice for Neighbor's Gossip

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Women's Editor
The telephone is a lovely instrument when on its good behavior. We have been telephone conscious ever since we tried to call a friend from a Portland telephone booth. Having forgotten our glasses, and finding the print in the city telephone book surprisingly small, we tried to look up the number, holding the book at arm's length. Ever try to hold a telephone at arm's length while standing in a telephone booth which touches you on the north, west and east sides even when you stand quiet and relaxed? Well, we are inventive, so we opened the little door that doubles up inside itself. But the man who pays the electric bill had invented a light turner-offer which throws one in utter darkness once the door opens. We thought of several other ways, including putting the book on the floor and looking at it from a standing position, but they had chained it to the wall. Another possibility was sitting on the floor and reading the number, but our arm wasn't long enough. About this time we must have blacked out, for we can't remember how we found the number and got outside, little worse for the wear except for a slight case of claustrophobia and a stiff neck. Yes, the telephone is a handy affair. It never rings when you are waiting for it, but just get into the bathtub or lock yourself out of the house, and you'll hear it jangling. It's fine for 'teen-agers to enjoy while lying on the floor, dandy for infants to throw around and five-year olds to dash for before mamma gets there. There's no better gadget in the house for ordering groceries, inviting friends in for a game of bridge or finding wandering children. We know one woman who makes good use of her's for bawling out her husband at the office for not emptying the garbage or cleaning out the furnace. The 12-party line is wonderful invention too. Good for hearing bits of juicy gossip, but for every whisper of scandal that goes from your phone, you know 11 others will repeat and 11 more will hear it. With a telephone in the house one feels so close to the family, the grocer and the police. That is, you feel so close unless the line is busy. Yes, the phone is a handy instrument and is here to stay, but it's darned handy just the same, when the other lady on the line hangs on all morning.

Mrs. J. Howard Shubert and Miss Mabel Gaines will be hostesses to members of chapter G, PEO this afternoon at a dessert luncheon at their home on North 21st street. Mrs. Robert Elstrom will tell of her European trip during the afternoon.

Designing Woman

JACK-O-LANTERN FACES
How do you like Jack-o-Lanterns, happy, fierce or frightened? Here is how to carve all three kinds and give them plenty of trimmings. Make sure of startling expressions for the eyes with black circles, cut from black paper or from the black surfaces of the stiffer magazine pages. They stay in place in slits cut into the eye openings. Cut thin strips of pumpkin skin or orange paper for ears and fasten them on with toothpicks. A rakish hat and a pipe is all Happy Jack needs, but give a fierce fellow a wig and a villainous moustache. Use cornstarch for these, or the black crepe hair or black cotton yarn'll find on Halloween mask counters. Use cranberries, stuck on with pieces of toothpicks, to outline scary eyes and mouth, even ears. Make frightened Jack's hair stand on end—it's easy with cranberries on toothpicks, and give him a big nose with a little potato or apple.
